COUNTRY CLUB, Brookline, Sept. 20.—Francis Ouimet, the famous amateur boy golf champion, this afternoon won the national open championship in the play-off of the triple tie between himself, Harry Vardon and Edward Ray.

Ouimet covered the eighteen holes round in 72 strokes by playing some of the most amazing golf of the great tourney.

Vardon, who threatened all the way to the sixteenth hole, was second in 77 strokes. Edward Ray, out of the running for a long time, made a game finish for a score of 78.

A tremendous crowd followed the golfers in the rain and there was a wild demonstration when Ouimet finally won after a long grueling playoff with the two most famous professionals of Great Britain.

A Wonderful Golf Match.

The eighteen-hole round today was the result of the triple tie in the great tourney yesterday, when Ouimet, Vardon and Ray, tied on the third round at 225, came through the final round each in 79 strokes and finished together in 304.

It was necessary to play a three-cornered match today to settle the championship. Ouimet's victory was the greatest ever won by an American golf player. He kept the American title in this country after the most formidable contest for it ever made from abroad.

The play-off was followed by tense interest. It was close throughout. Startling golf was played.

All three men finished the nine holes out in 38. Ray fell down on the way back, but Vardon kept up till the sixteenth hole. Ray picked up towards the finish, but it was too late. After the sixteenth hole Vardon was beaten.

The heavy drizzle did not keep the golf enthusiasts away from the links, and several thousands, clad in all kinds of rainproof clothing, followed the three players around the eighteen holes. Betting before the match started was 1 to 3 on Ouimet, and even money was placed that Ouimet would beat either man named.

Crowd Was Enthusiastic.

The three players started off together shortly after 10 o'clock, with a great gallery following, in spite of the rain. The officials asked the large gallery to

Garment Strike Spreads to 45 Shops

Pickets Are Active But No Trouble Is Reported.

The strike of the Ladies' Garment Workers' Union spread to twenty additional shops in the North and West End districts today. This makes 450 men and women now out, according to the officers of the union, and forty-five shops tied up by the strike.

Picket details made up in equal part of men and women patrolled the strike zone today, despite a driving rain storm, but no trouble was reported.

Benjamin Norn, business agent of the Boston local, reports two small shops as having settled with the union. He further asserts that several other employers are making overtures, and claims that a complete victory is assured for the strikers.

Mystery in 'Suicide' of Princess Sophie

Berlin Report Says She Did Not End Her Own Life.

BERLIN, Sept. 20.—The death of Princess Sophie of Saxe-Weimar is surrounded with mystery. The castle authorities, doctors and police refuse information, with the result that various rumors are afloat.

A report current is that it is not a case of suicide, and that the love affair with Hans Bleichroder is not connected with the tragedy.

The mystery is heightened by the prolonged visit to the castle of the Public Prosecutor, which gives color to the report that the death was not a suicide.

Cheap Meals Drive Girl to Suicide

Lived on Twenty-Cent Dinners for Six Months.

CHICAGO, Sept. 20.—Social welfare workers were interested to-day in the fate of Selma Peterson, nineteen, employed in a clothing factory, who committed suicide after she had lived for six months on meals which food experts said were sufficient to sustain life.

Her menus for her act was given in a note:

"Wages too low. Life not worth living."

In a notebook she had set down her weekly expenditures, showing that meals, room rent, car fare and laundry took $7.25 of her $8 wages. There were entries which stated that her daily diet consisted of the following:

For breakfast, coffee and rolls.

For dinner, beef stew and milk; rice pudding.

For supper, fruit salad, graham crackers and milk.

Shortly before the girl died she regained consciousness. To a physician she said: "Doctor, did you ever live for six months on 20-cent dinners?"

New Haven Freight Train Is Derailed

According to the company no one was injured.

TELL OFFER TO "FIX" RAID ON FERNCROFT INN

"Count" Louis Tableau and Herbert Gerry, the Watch and Ward Society's detectives, one who played the role of a breezy Westerner, the other as a French count, today testified that they witnessed intoxicated young men and women dancing, and that Harry K. Mansfield, proprietor of Ferncroft Inn, who is on trial charged with keeping a liquor nuisance, wanted Gerry to "fix things up" with Agent J. Frank Chase of the society at the fourth day of the trial at the Salem District Court.

Tells of Dancing.

The "count" testified on direct examination:

"August 6 I went to Ferncroft with Gerry and two women. At 9 o'clock we asked for a table and could not get one, so the party went to the dance hall and sat down.

"Later Mr. Johnson told us a table was ready. I saw a young girl about seventeen in company of a man about forty; both were intoxicated. Also saw a boy about nineteen with a girl about sixteen or seventeen, dancing. All seemed to have been drinking."

Denies "Humbug."

Gerry told of a conversation he had with Mansfield at the North Station, in which Mansfield wanted to "fix things up." Gerry testified:

"On last Thursday night I met Mansfield at the North Station as we were both trying to get trains. Mansfield asked me how I was feeling and if I could fix things up with Agent Chase of the society. I replied that I was willing to do it. Mansfield told me he was willing to pay a fine. I replied that the fine would be $1000. I promised to see Chase and do my best about it."

Gerry, under cross-examination by Attorney Sullivan, testified that no one heard the conversation. Gerry also denied that he read from a publication at that time and that the talk he had with Mansfield in the station was upon what a Boston publication had said.

SCHMIDT COOLLY CONFESSES

NEW YORK, Sept. 20. The Rev. Hans Schmidt, slayer of Anna Aumuller, astounded the police by confessing a part for killings by wholesale which he had intended to execute in New York.

Coolly and with apparent satisfaction, he confessed to Inspector Faurot's detectives that he had intended to execute aged persons, cripples, persons with incurable ailments and "all who found this world a hardship."

He had three methods which he proposed to use the easiest forms of death. They were shooting, poisoning and disarming.

He confessed he had intended to use the blank death certificates in his room to make the official records show that a number of his parishioners and others, whom he had intended to kill, had died from natural causes. He said:

To Kill Painlessly.

"I intended to end their lives painlessly, and those whom I meant to kill were persons who would be better off in the other world. I meant to end the suffering of cripples, geniuses, persons suffering from incurable ailments, and others who were leading miserable lives and would be better off out of the world. I believe I would be carrying out God's will."

Schmidt has begged to go to the electric chair at once.

The fingernails of Anna Aumuller's body have been brought from Jersey City and placed in the City Morgue, awaiting Coroner Feinberg's inquest next week. Alphonse Koehler, counsel for Schmidt, claims the authorities cannot identify the body as Miss Aumuller's. He demands that they produce the missing head.

Boasting that he had freed death and had no fear of it, the prisoner calmly said he wanted to "accommodate all who wanted to die, but lacked the courage to kill themselves." He said he would either kill them or help them to do it.

He said also he had meant to forge one of these certificates to register the death of Anna Aumuller, but that he decided it would be safer to do nothing after the finding of a part of the girl's body had started an inquiry into the murder.

"Killed Only Anna."

Schmidt said he was arrested before he had killed anyone besides Anna Aumuller, but Inspector Faurot, nevertheless, ordered a search of the records of the Board of Health to see whether any papers forged by Schmidt have been filed there.

Schmidt refused to name any of the persons he had selected for victims.

MAY ASK RETURN OF FUGITIVE

CONCORD, N. H., Sept. 20.—The sudden arrival here today of W. K. McKeown, K. C., of Montreal, one of Harry K. Thaw's Canadian counsel, on a secret and mysterious visit to Thaw, caused immediate belief that the Dominion of Canada intends to make a formal demand upon the State Department at Washington for the surrender of Thaw on the ground that he was deported into the United States in violation of a habeas corpus writ from the Superior Court for Quebec Province.

While no statement was made, it is deemed certain that Canada either has demanded Thaw or is preparing papers in a demand for the fugitive.

Mr. McKeown went immediately to the "Throne room" of the Eagle Hotel, where Thaw is quartered. There was a conference in which Thaw, McKeown, Merril Shurtleff and Judge Chase of Thaw's legal lawyers took part.

The deportation of Thaw into the United States on Wednesday morning, September 10, was one of the most radical steps ever taken in the Dominion. N. K. LaFlamme, K. C., of Thaw's counsel, had sued out a writ of habeas corpus, ordering Thaw to be produced before Judge Gervais at Montreal the following Monday. Meanwhile a Dominion board of immigration inquiry was holding a session at Three Rivers.

The board was notified by telegraph of the habeas corpus writ, but that night Thaw was abruptly taken in an auto by

BROCKTON MAN SHOT IN ROW OVER WOMAN

BROCKTON, Sept. 20.—"I am going to kill you," shouted Andrew Langley, fifty-six, engineer of the Brockton Gas Works, after he had been an arguments today with A. Eugene Woodward, proprietor of Ardmore apartment house on High street, and then fired upon Woodward, wounding him in the side. Woodward was taken to the Brockton hospital and Langley was arrested, charged with assault and attempt to kill.

Langley admits that he shot Woodward and claims that the injured man has been too familiar with his wife.

"About three weeks ago I found this man [illegible] my wife talking together in my house on Wyman street," said Langley. "I have asked him several times to explain his presence in my home, and he has turned me off. This morning we had a dispute and I just shot him for his actions."

Woodward's wound is not serious. For many years he has been inspector of buildings here and a member of the City Council and is prominent in fraternal and business circles.

"Let Bryan cancel all his Chautauqua dates, proceed to Mexico in person and there on the platform assemble the belligerents and deliver to them nightly his celebrated lecture on 'The Prince of Peace.'

"If it costs the audience as much as it does the United States it may end the war by financial exhaustion."

Guard Lynn Official from "Black Hand"

Demand Five Hundred Dollars from Treasurer Babb.

Armed police today guarded Tax Collector Walter P. Babb at the Lynn City Hall, as the result of a "Black Hand" letter sent to that official. The letter, written on the leaf of a notebook, read as follows:

"Tomorrow (saturday) morning about 10 o'clock, a man with a brown suit of clothes and a glove in the top pocket will see you, give him 500 dollars in money or he will come at 11 o'clock and take it. . . . we don't believe that taxes are just; you do money we want. money we will have. don't tell the police. have money ready."

The letter was written in legible English, without capitals, and the spelling was accurate. The plain, white envelope was stamped on the upper left-hand corner. At the bottom of the sheet on which it was a skull and crossbones, and at the right, a heart pierced with a knife. All was done in lead pencil. Between the gruesome symbols at the bottom on the page was the signature "Gold defiance."

SCHMIDT "TO SHOOT, POISON AND DISSECT"

Most of them, however, he admitted, were parishioners of St. Joseph's Church.

This intention to practice the theories of euthanasia was pronounced by Inspector Faurot to be an afterthought of the prisoner, volunteered and manufactured to lend appearance of insanity to the damaging admissions of his confession.

Schmidt made the confession when confronted with a bona fide book of death certificates from the Board of Health, which are issued to physicians, but which had been found secreted in his room in the parish house. He confessed that he had stolen the book from a reputable physician within the past two months.

Find Vera Harris.

The AMERICAN has found in London the woman who says she is Vera Harris. She admitted that she wrote letters to Muret which were signed "Your loving wife."

She says that in April, 1910, Muret had a clean sheet with Gerald Mollere. Hans Schmidt has confessed that he posed as Dr. Emil Mollere since arriving in New York.

This woman gives the astounding information that Mollere was a Regent street clairvoyant and called himself "doctor."

Schmidt's confession that he stole death certificates for the immediate purpose of disposing of the body of Anna Aumuller in a format way in the guise of a legal burial led Inspector Faurot to say:

"Man Not Insane."

"This clearly proves to my mind premeditation by Schmidt in the death of Anna Aumuller. See how clearly and coolly this calculating demon was figuring out the murder of this girl. He foresaw the difficulty of disposing of her body. He circumvented that by stealing from the death certificates which he pilfered. Then he learned that he needed possession of the other style of certificate upon which physicians make their returns as to the cause of death direct to the Health Department. He needed that and he stole that. Something intervened that upset his calculations, and Anna would not be sent for an undertaker with her throat cut as he cut it. So he threw this elaborately conceived plan aside and dissected her and threw the parts into the river.

"But would any insane man work out such a plan? Not for a minute. Another proof—diabolical proof—of his inhuman ingenuity and that he is a brainy criminal."

Mrs. Pankhurst to Come Without Guise

Joan Wickham Quite Sure She Will Be Admitted to United States.

NEW YORK, Sept. 20.—Interest in the coming visit of Mrs. Emmeline Pankhurst, leader of England's militant suffragettes, is increasing because of the question as to whether or not she will be permitted to enter the United States.

Miss Joan Wickham, Mrs. Pankhurst's organizer, who is now in New York arranging for the visit of the woman who has kept England in a turmoil, is confident that her leader will be admitted when she reaches these shores, October 18.

"Mrs. Pankhurst was here in 1911, after she had been in prison," said Miss Wickham. "The United States government at that time made no objections to her landing here. Mrs. Pankhurst will not disguise herself in any way. She has no fear of being excluded, for whatever crimes she has been imprisoned for were political ones."

Schmidt's Plea for Death in Remarkable Interview

"Why can't they be quick and put me in the electric chair? The District Attorney wants it, the public wants it, I want it myself.

"I have never denied anything in connection with this murder and I never shall deny anything.

"I would be pleased to satisfy the Louisville, Ky., authorities that I killed that girl of whom they are talking so much. By doing so I might save Wandling, whom they have imprisoned. What difference would one extra murder, or half a dozen, for that matter, make to me?

"Death is to me only a step into another life. I had the gift of St. Elizabeth in this matter. I did merely what was my duty. I have faced death many a time, and I shall go to the electric chair without quivering a muscle."

COUPLE DEAD IN BROOKLINE STREET BLAZE

Investigation has been begun of the fire at No. 94 East Brookline street early today which caused the death of Mr. and Mrs. Timothy Hurley, recently married, who died at the City Hospital. The fire is thought to have been incendiary.

Frank Hickey, the owner of the house who lives on the second floor, discovered the fire. He woke his wife, who had her baby out of the window until the firemen came and took them down the ladder. Hickey attempted to reach the third floor where the Hurleys lived to wake them but the smoke was too thick. John Garvais, who lived on the first floor with his wife, had no difficulty in getting out.

The fire started in the cellar, the rear and spread rapidly up the rear stairway to the top of the house. The smoke was thick, as fire had been burning for some time before it was discovered. The firemen found the Hurleys in a rear chamber on the top floor and carried them out on stretchers. Mrs. Hurley died on her arrival at the hospital and Hurley a little later.

The building was a three-story brick dwelling and the damage was $1,000.

PROTEST USE OF FIRE UNIFORMS BY THE POLICE

Although Fire Commissioner Cole says he sanctioned the use of firemen's uniforms by policemen who secured evidence against the Atlas Athletic Association at the Arena, the Russell Fire Club, composed of nearly all the firemen in the ranks, is planning to prevent the uniforms being used again as disguises for police department sleuths.

The firemen do not believe it is necessary that their uniforms should be used as disguises. "It will make the public suspicious of all of us," said one ladderman.

It is said the full regulation fireman's uniform was used by the police during the Arena. One of the patrolmen was so disguised is said to have been Reserve Officer Rowe of the City Hall station. With other patrolmen, two of whom are said to be former firemen, he attended the Langford-Flynn boxing bout.

The firemen, in opposing Commissioner Cole's stand, say it does not add to the dignity of the uniform to have it worn as a policeman's disguise. It is said that Commissioner Cole even loaned the hats and badges to the police so they could be properly disguised.

Lengthen Running Time on New Haven

It is said that on October 5, when New Haven Fall time-table goes into effect, running time of the trains between Boston and New York will be lengthened from five to twelve minutes, according to present plans. On the limited five-hour trains—the Knickerbocker, Merchants and Bay State—the time will be lengthened ten minutes, the hour of departure remaining the same, arrival at destination being ten minutes later. On the five-and-one-half-hour trains the schedule will be lengthened twelve minutes, and on the six-hour trains from five to ten minutes.

To Discuss Changes in Lynn Licenses

Inspector D. The granting of yearly licenses will give the inspectors of the above places more power.

I MADE $6,500 BY LECTURING, SAYS BRYAN

WASHINGTON, Sept. 20.—Declaring that he had not altered his plans and that he expects to lecture whenever he deems it desirable or necessary, Secretary of State Bryan today issued the following statement:

This evening is the last of the Chautauqua lectures for this season. My total income from the Chautauqua lectures this year is a little over $7,000. The net receipts after taking out expenses are somewhat over $6,500. The number of whole week days which have been used for lectures is, according to my recollection, seven. The remainder of the lectures were delivered at places near enough to Washington to enable me to leave here in the afternoon sometimes as late as 3 o'clock.

I would not assume that the public was interested in these details were it not for the fact that the representatives of the newspapers have regarded it as a matter of great importance.

The criticism that has been directed against my lecturing is no more bitter than that which I have encountered during other times and for other things during my connection with politics. No man should enter public life if he objects to criticism, and he cannot stay in public life if he permits criticism to turn him from the doing of what he considers is right. He must decide his duty for himself and be answerable to the public for any mistakes that he makes.

I regard lecturing as an entirely legitimate duty. Even before I was nominated for President, I lectured between campaigns. I shall continue to lecture and I shall not believe that any person whose opinion is worth having will think the less of me for so doing.

This closes the lecture subject for the present.

LOVE STORY OF EVELYN AND HARRY

CHAPTER XXIV.

"Th' lunatic and that takes the reason prisoner."

—MACBETH.

Everyone took it for granted that insanity, probably of the emotional form, would be set up as a plea for the defense by Thaw's counsel.

The District Attorney's office figured that out as soon as it heard of the shooting. Early the next morning Acting District Attorney Nott retained the services of Dr. Carlos F. Macdonald and Dr. Austin Flint, widely known alienists, to serve the State in the expected psychological dispute.

Mr. Nott said confidently to the reporters:

"I haven't the slightest idea that Thaw is insane and I believe we will have no trouble in establishing that."

Dr. Flint and Dr. Macdonald were brought to the Tombs and had a two-minute survey of Thaw after the latter had been remanded to await the inquest. Thaw denied to the alienists that he was a drunkard or that he used drugs. He denied to recent these imputations.

Meanwhile, lawyers had been busy for Thaw. Both the Delafields, prior to their conference with Evelyn, went to the Tombs and saw Thaw for a few minutes. With them went ex-Judge W. M. K. Olcott of the famous law firm of Black, Olcott, Gruber and Boayage. The senior member of this firm was ex-Governor Frank Black. One of the first things which Frederick Delafield did, when Evelyn Nesbit called him on the telephone the morning after the murder, was to retain the services of Olcott & Black's firm. When the Delafields went to the Tombs to see Thaw they were for time with the company of ex-Judge Olcott, a man of long experience in criminal law.

These were all the visitors Thaw had through the afternoon following the fatal night. He sat in his cell helpless, while the whole city gossiped of what he had done and what manifold results his rash act would bring.

What Part Will Evelyn Play.

Through that first day following the shooting the public had been asking:

"What part will Evelyn Nesbit Thaw play in the defence of her husband?"

Already divers rumors were spreading as to the story that Mrs. Thaw would tell. It was said that she was prepared to go to any length to save her husband. That she would submit herself to legal examination and cross-examination, if necessary.

Evelyn had made only one or two disconnected statements to reporters before one of the Delafields caught her up in the midst of talking and put a lock upon her tongue. The lawyers were not going to have their defence prejudiced by any wild statements that the girl might make.

Evelyn would be required, the lawyers knew, to go before the Grand Jury which was to hear the evidence against Thaw no later than Thursday morning, the third day after the shooting. This Grand Jury date, by the way, illustrated the speed with which the prosecution was pushing its case.

Meanwhile, the victim of this singing, Stanford White, was in a coffin in his beautiful town house at Gramercy Park. The coffin was placed near one of the chief art objects in the house, a superb statue of the "Venus Genetrix."

A few years before Stanford White, while buying art treasures in Rome, had purchased this statue, which had been recovered from the muddy bed of the River Tiber of historic record.

The "Venus Genetrix" typified one of the more amorous attributes of the ancient goddess of beauty. Classists in New York, who heard that Stanford White's body reposed near this statue, reflected grimly upon the persistent association of this theme with the life and death of the architect.

Friends of the dead man's family maintained seclusion and silence. When asked about the charge that Thaw had made against White they refused to speak.

Preparations for the funeral were made. It was set for Thursday morning, the day of the inquest, with burial at St. James, Long Island.

* * *

The murder of Stanford White caused no odd interruption at a society charity in a London suburb. This charity was a bazaar, a brilliant function, at which Her Royal Highness, Princess Louise of Schleswig-Holstein was presiding. Among those present were their Graces, the Earl and Countess of Yarmouth. The latter was formerly Alice Thaw, sister of the New York assassin. London newspaper correspondents journeyed down in solemn formality to Evesham and asked for the Earl of Yarmouth. They informed him that his celebrated brother-in-law had shot and killed a noted New Yorker. The reporters outlined as much of the case as they knew.

The news caused a ripple, even in Yarmouth's brain. He left the correspondents a moment to tell the Countess. When he came out his noble countenance was all rumpled up, so to speak, with as much emotion as His Grace was capable of feeling.

"It has been—ah—painful—very painful, I assure you," he said to the interviewers, in reference to breaking the news to his wife. "The Countess is, of course terribly upset. I really cannot assign any reasonable motive for Thaw's act."

Then the Earl hinted that he did not always regard Thaw as a responsible person. His Grace doubtless recalled the tumultuous scenes prior to and at his own wedding, in which Harry had been such a volatile figure.

The Earl even went so far as to say that he would not be surprised to learn that there had been trouble between Thaw and White, showing that His Grace had been posted a bit on family scandal.

The news was terribly distressing to the Earl, the Countess, to the Earl's noble pops, the Marquis of Hertford, and doubtless to Her Royal Highness, the Princess Louise of Schleswig-Holstein, as well as to divers and sundry other highnesses and such, with whom the House of Thaw had established more or less of a connection.

* * *

It will be noticed that Mr. Nott of the District Attorney's office, who was taking general charge of the prosecution, has not the actual head of that department, but the acting District Attorney. The departmental head, as stated before, was William Travers Jerome.

Where was Mr. Jerome through all these sudden activities?

In the light of present developments up at Cuttlewell, in the province of Quebec, where Mr. Jerome was arrested on the terrible charge of playing "penny ante," it is interesting to note that, at the time Harry Thaw shot Stanford White, Mr. Jerome was on a sailing trip in Canada.

Whether Mr. Jerome played any "ante," penny or otherwise, on that trip, is not on record, but he got out of the Dominion that time without being arrested.

Anyhow, Mr. Nott sent word up to Mr. Jerome and announcement was made that Mr. Jerome would be back in New York the following Monday, to take personal charge of this murder case de luxe.

WAS EVELYN WORTH SAVING?

What do you think? Gertrude Atherton, the novelist, says not. This is how the woman over whose case so much discussion was aroused looks today. It is from her latest photograph.

Was Evelyn Worthy?

Gertrude Atherton's declaration that Evelyn Nesbit was not worth saving continues to bring forth letters of protest from all quarters. It is the general belief, as shown by the hundreds of letters bearing on the question received by the AMERICAN, that no amount of genius could excuse the accomplishing of a girl's downfall.

Here are a few more of the most striking letters received:

Eccentricity No Excuse.

Society has too long forgiven the "eccentricities of genius." Because a man can design a great cathedral, paint a remarkably picture, or compose a wonderful melody, should he have more license than a man who can perfect a great machine, accomplish a great stroke of trade, or make a widely noticed business deal?

Stanford White as an architect was undoubtedly a genius. Had he been a poor genius, living in a garret, society would not have forgiven his "eccentricities," and would not have blamed the woman. Evelyn Nesbit was just as much worth saving as any woman in the world.

BUSINESS MAN.

But One Answer.

There is but one answer to your question. Some time ago the United States was aroused over a campaign in some of the greater cities based on the question of "what would Christ do today?" Put these two questions together, and the answer lies in the action of Christ himself when He said to a certain woman, "Neither do I condemn thee; go and sin no more." If Christ "saved" Mary Magdalen, would he not save Evelyn Nesbit?

CLERGYMAN.

Blamed on Woman.

Ever since the creation of man, the sin of the world has been blamed upon woman. "She gave me of the tree, and I did eat," said Adam, in excuse for his sin. The old argument has been brought into play once more, and again the woman has been made to take the blame for the entire Thaw-White tragedy. The modern double standard of morality is again involved.

Gertrude Atherton, in refusing salvation to Evelyn Nesbit, is relapsing into barbarism once more; she is attempting to bring about a condition which existed when the cave man beat his wife into submission, or a much later period, when the women took the place of the dough-ex.

The argument that genius is an excuse for anything is merely a relapse into an ancient belief, a belief which sprang up with the artistic era of the Renaissance, when artists were naturally licentious and profligate. Those times are past, and this is—except in isolated cases—a general era of Common Sense. And certainly Evelyn Nesbit was worth saving—if any human being is worth saving.

FRICTION AMONG ATTORNEYS FOR THAW; HARRY DISMISSES LAWYER GROSSMAN FROM CASE

CONCORD, N. H., Sept. 20.—Just as the extradition hearing before Governor Felker is approaching, Morris Grossman, the New York lawyer, who was credited with thinking up the federal writ scheme to help Harry, has been dismissed from the case.

This dismissal was accomplished through a letter dispatched to Grossman in New York from Harry's headquarters here.

One report today said Harry became incensed because he thought Grossman was having too much to say and that Grossman was also taking too much credit upon himself for the issuance of Jerome at the habeas corpus hearing at Littleton last Thursday.

Another report was that Thaw's real lawyers in New Hampshire men feel that matters had come to a point of too much crowding.

All records in the Littleton proceedings the writ issuing on this federal writ was sworn to by Grossman. The actual petition for the writ last Saturday was made by Attorneys N. E. Martin and Merrill resident of the New Hampshire bar.

But they were supposed, by the reporters and others, at least, to have been advised in their petition by Grossman.

Jerome charged that appealing for a federal writ was a breach of faith by Grossman. He found Grossman with it, and the latter practically admitted that the writ was sued out to protect Harry over extradition proceedings.

Grossman was quoted as saying he had instructed Martin and Shurtleff to use out the writ, and there was no question raised but what the idea was Grossman's.

Concord lawyers admit freely that this federal writ was the smartest legal manoeuvre accomplished for Thaw since he slipped out of Matteawan. It resulted in the checkmating of Jerome and even in his humiliation by Judge Aldrich at the Littleton hearing. Jerome dropped out of sight and was believed to have been in high dudgeon when he hurried back to New York.

When the news of the letter of dismissal to Grossman became known last night and the reasons back of it were reported, former Governor William A. Brown of Pennsylvania, personal representative of the Thaw family, was asked who really thought up the writ scheme.

Refusing to be drawn into the trouble, Governor Brown stoutly said he didn't know whose idea it was.

Stone Not in Charge.

"Are you in charge of the Thaw case now?" he was asked.

"No," he replied, "not a bit of it. Thaw is directing how things shall be done. He is the captain."

So far Harry has refused to give an explanation himself of this reported rift nor between him and lawyers.

It is said that a hint has been dropped to Harry that New Hampshire lawyers could be able to keep him in the tradition nearing to greater advantage than a New York lawyer. Grossman was supposed to be talking before Governor Felker. In fact, Grossman had as much as said so before he left here for New York. Dispatches from New York today said that Grossman was combing the country by telegraph for precedents in extradition of insane persons, if any precedents are to be found. This had created talk that Grossman was primarily to handle the extradition arguments before the Governor, not having received the dismissal letter up to that time.

Gratifying to Jerome.

The elimination of Grossman leaves the supposition now that former Justice Chase of the New Hampshire Supreme Court, the venerable jurist recently retained by Thaw, will present the Thaw argument at the extradition hearing.

The absence of Grossman will be gratifying to Jerome, it is thought. Jerome was vastly irritated by Grossman, dubbed him the "Mouse" outside of court and even referred to him as "loquacious" before Judge Aldrich at the habeas corpus hearing. Judge Aldrich promptly made Jerome apologize, all of which tickled Grossman hugely.

THAW'S OWN STORY

Signs of Insanity

By HARRY K. THAW

Below is printed the first installment of a remarkable article on "Signs of Insanity" by Harry Kendall Thaw, who has read widely on the subject since his acquittal for the killing of Stanford White on the ground of insanity. It was his intention to issue it in book form, but the AMERICAN has secured the right of serial newspaper publication. Its testamentary will be printed every day until the article is completed.

Copyright, 1913, by H. K. Thaw.

In writing me as a joke what an outline I would go to work on how to tell a sane person from an insane one. I said also it would look absurd for an ordinary man, not an expert, to set up as an authority, but he said he would take the responsibility and repeated his request, so I proceeded on the condition that it is made plain that this article is the idea of the editor and not my own.

To be frankly in no authoritative subject. I never was invited to visit an asylum, so having consented I expected to kindly copy "signs of insanity" out of the books. It was a lucky blow to this that the medical books tell how to diagnosis persons suffering with one form of insanity from those afflicted with other forms, describing the respective symptoms, but do not tell how to tell an insane from a sane person. On looking around for a reason for this omission, it appeared that no rules or "signs" need be given to tell a sane from an insane person, as anybody can see the difference.

The only person who cannot tell the differences is the one afflicted with mental disease. When a man or woman goes insane, by my else, with rare exceptions, never appreciates the fact. The victim imagines his insane notions are all right and no arguments of his friends can make him realize his condition. When his friends differ with all his insane notions he thinks something is wrong with his friends. He may think they are trying to deceive him or he may think they have gone crazy, but in any case he thinks his own mind is all right.

An Easy Sign.

This total inability of an insane man to see the error of his ideas always surprises an ordinary sane man. It is one of the easiest signs by which to distinguish a person with mental disease from a sane one. A sane man may get a mistaken opinion or an original idea, but he will be able to discuss it and will listen to the arguments and opinions of his friends. A sane man may stick to his own ideas, but he will give attention to objections and be able to meet them or explain and you will be able to see that possibly he is right. If a sane man gets an idea that is so unreasonable that no sensible person would hold to it, he gives it up as soon as this is pointed out.

A sane man may hold to an improbable idea, as the Wright brothers held to their flying machine, but such ideas are possibilities admitted by others. It may be remembered that the Wrights acknowledged the difficulties, and went about their plans in a very sensible way. A lunatic holds to plainly false ideas, and refuses to accept any arguments nor to any facts that conflict his opinions of the theory he has formed his insane ideas, though in other things the lunatic may be upright or sane person. A lunatic may tell you a lie of what he thinks are reasons to support the delusion, but his arguments are as baseless as his delusions, and when all his supposable therapeutics are delusions resulting from the diseased condition of his mind. Even an attempt to reason with a lunatic is useless. It is possible that his own mind is deranged. At this moment there is such an alienist confined within fifty miles of New York afflicted with insane delusions, who is perfectly sane but who knows he is insane, but is more cock-sure of his judgment than he ever was before he went crazy.

One Great Difference.

There are one or two great differences between mental sickness and other diseases. In other maladies the sufferer is the first to feel it, though others may not notice it, but when a person becomes afflicted with insanity he thinks there is something wrong with his friends instead of himself. I can agree with his description.

From this it might be expected to follow that when a person goes insane, none of the signs of his disease is that he will admit that he is insane, no matter though all his friends tell him so. He will think that they are crazy. Neither reason nor argument will move him. A sane person may get an erroneous idea, but corrects it by sound sense. A lunatic instead of checking his mental errors by seeking for the proper explanations of any unusual facts, as soon as he is afflicted with a delusion, "readies out" for every fact real or fancied, recent or old, and consummates it with a delusional or special significance to suit his primary torturesome conception."

Shifting or Fixed.

Insane delusions may be shifting or fixed. Some insane delusions may hold his mind only a few moments, when his deranged thoughts jump to other non sense. Another insane delusion may exist for a longer period, while another's may dominate his mind to the end of the life and become intertwined with other false ideas as in a paranoiac, so that he sees everybody's actions in a false light.

Here we have come to the differences between different forms of insanity. It is with these different symptoms that the text-books on insanity are filled. They are of paramount interest to alienists, as alienists must classify different forms of insanity in the huge sometimes to learn how to cure mental diseases, but the public at large do not ask me to write of these differences between forms, but of the differences between sane and insane people. So far we have noticed one.

FEAR ACTIONS OF CRANKS IN THE THAW CASE

Assistant Superintendent of Immigration E. Blake Robertson and two inspectors had been stationed at the border at Norton Mills, Vt., in order violation of the habeas corpus writ.

The Immigration Department and the Department of the Interior, which ordered the deportation, thought the Thaw episode was ended for Canada.

But Mr. Lafleur, of the Montreal court did not take kindly to the summary act of the Immigration Board. They went to the Canadian Court of Appeals, which heard argument on the case Thursday.

The Immigration Board's counsel said that by the terms of the Immigration Act the courts could not interfere in Immigration matters.

Mr. Lafleur, arguing for Thaw and the Writ said the Immigration inspectors had broken all precedent and that, if their violation of a human corpus writ was condoned, no more liberty was conserved in the Dominion.

The Court of Appeals will hand down a decision Tuesday. Meanwhile Mr. Mc-Knowin has suddenly announced here, at the very moment when the habeas corpus question is before the Dominion courts.

FELKER AND THAW CLOSELY GUARDED BY DETECTIVES

CONCORD, N. H., Sept. 20.—Fear for the safety of Governor Felker and the prisoner figures in the Thaw drama, led to an order today by which police guards and private and State detectives in plain clothes were thrown around the men most concerned in the case.

Thaw, almost as rigorously guarded as he ever was since the shooting of Stanford White, and the Governor at his home in Rochester, more isolated from the general public.

Cranks and self-minded partisans for and against Thaw have made persistent demands to see Governor Felker, and it is rumored that threats against his personal safety should he allow Thaw to be taken out of the State, have been made.

With the opposition of the Governor's hearing to extradite Thaw to State officers, the proceedings of the building of the Capitol Grounds, the chambers in which they meet, with no end in sight, and even the approaches to the State House.

The Eagle Hotel, which has been converted in the throne room, has been transformed into a practical barracks. Detectives and State police patrol the corridors, and strangers are questioned as to their business. Even the servants of the men who are fighting for Thaw's freedom.

BACKACHE IS DISCOURAGING

Until You Get After the Cause

Nothing more discouraging than a constant backache.

Lame when you awake. Pains pierce you when you bend or lift. It's hard to work, or to rest.

You sleep poorly and next day is the same old story.

That backache indicates bad kidneys and calls for some good kidney remedy.

None so well recommended as Doan's Kidney Pills. Home testimony is proof.

"Every Picture Tells a Story"

Here's Another Boston Case—

Mrs. Albert Pflaume, 32 Thurman St., Everett, Boston, Mass., says: "A year ago I used Doan's Kidney Pills, and they cured me so completely of kidney trouble that I haven't suffered since. I tell every one I hear complaining of kidney complaint about this remedy. Another of my family used Doan's Kidney Pills and was cured, too."

SEEK TO LEARN HOW WILLIAMS DID BORROWING

An investigation has been begun by State authorities to ascertain the names of some of the persons and institutions from whom George E. Williams, the Braintree millionaire, owner of many women, swindler and forger, obtained a large proportion of his $1,000,000 gains by borrowings perhaps as questionable on the part of those who lent him the money as on his own.

To borrow money from 700 to 1,000 per cent. more than the value of the insurance policy he gave as security, appears to have been a common practice with Williams. In several cases he is said to have obtained $3,000 loans on policies worth little more than $200.

Attorneys declared today that, if it was their own money the men who thus favored Williams were lending, it was undoubtedly their right to treat him in this remarkable manner, but if, on the other hand, it was money held by them in trust, they might be liable to criminal prosecution in case they could not make good.

Administrator A. N. Hunt declares he doubts if Williams forged any insurance policies. The offering of a second Williams will, which leaves nearly all his property to his wife, is expected at the Probate Court office in Dedham. Lawyers representing numerous creditors of the estate today continued their search at the court houses and registries in Suffolk, Norfolk, Middlesex, Worcester and Plymouth counties for property owned by Williams.

George A. Miller was cut off with $1 by his father.

FREE, MEDICINE TO ALL VICTIMS OF CONSTIPATION

Wagner's Good Health Pills Prove Long Needed Blessing.

A Box Is Free, Postpaid, to Anyone, Anywhere.

CONSTIPATION NO LONGER FEARED

The "Secret" of Good Health Is Really No Secret at All.

Stop "Physic Habit Catharties" and Take Proper Remedy.

Constipation numbers its victims by millions—and not one case in one thousand is receiving proper treatment. Ordinary cathartics—they exaggerate the affliction and fasten the "physic habit" upon one. The Wagner Medicine Company has at last found out a remedy for constipation for which the most positive claims are made. It is harmless, nonpoisonous, painless and perfect in its action, and long prompt and grateful relief. Wagner's Good Health Pills not only relieve constipation and remove impurities from the system, but build up the general health in a most remarkable manner.

In itself, constipation is bad enough, but when one considers the multitude of nervous and physical symptoms—sleeplessness, irritability, dizziness, indigestion, poor heart action, sluggish circulation, lack of energy and ambition—which accompany it, and how the poisonous matter which should be expelled is absorbed into the blood and carried by the circulation to every organ, interfering with the function of each of these organs, it may be called the base of human existence. Nine-tenths of all sickness, of all ill-feeling of any character, would be done away with, it has been said, if the bowel action were normally regulated.

A box of Wagner's Good Health Pills costs you nothing. Try a box—and if you fail to say that this is the best remedy you have ever taken, you will be an exception. Try this remedy at once—just write name and address plainly, enclosing a 2-cent stamp to the Wagner Medicine Company, 1008 Railway Exchange, Denver, Colo., and return mail will bring a free box and place you under no obligation.

If women will know how the skin would clear, the eyes brighten and that "look" of good health come—if men but knew how the brain would take on new activity and "mind fogginess" come when the poisonous matter is effectually and thoroughly expelled from the system, not a man or woman who reads this article would allow another day to pass before sending for a free box of Wagner's Good Health Pills.

Write very plainly. Proper names are different. Address the Wagner Medicine Company, 1008 Railway Exchange, Denver, Colo., enclosing a 2-cent stamp.

OWEN LAUDS HEARST AID TO CURRENCY BILL

WASHINGTON, Sept. 20.—Senator Owen, chairman of the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency, today expressed his appreciation of the splendid support given by William Randolph Hearst to the banking and currency reform bills pending in Congress.

Senator Owen said:

"In the midst of innumerable articles appearing in the public press, very many of which are inaccurate and misleading, and a few of them obviously inspired by the hostile propaganda engineered by selfish interests, it is very gratifying to find the newspapers controlled by William Randolph Hearst giving a vigorous and patriotic support to the objects of this bill and to the main features of the measure.

The Bill Will Pass.

"There is no question whatever about the bill passing. The intelligence and patriotism of the country demand action, and this bill will be perfected and passed within a very few weeks.

"For five years the country has been studying this problem. Hundreds of thousands of dollars of public funds have been spent in a critical analysis of the European systems in regard of the problems involved, and during the last two years the discussion has been vigorously carried on in Congress and out of it.

"While this bill does not, of course, attempt to cover the system of agricultural credits except in a small degree by permitting the use of a portion of the national bank funds to be invested in farm mortgages, the present Congress undoubtedly will perfect an agricultural credit system which will harmonize with the national banking system and supplement its obvious lack of power as a commercial bank system to meet the permanent investment needs of the agricultural interests of the country.

Lauds American Editorial.

"Naturally, a few of the big banks which can be used by larger men for bulling and bearing stock markets, and which may be deprived of the undue and injurious control they have heretofore had over the credit system of the country, may oppose this plan to give a greater degree of financial freedom to men engaged in the productive industries of the nation.

"But the opposition of mere selfishness will not prevail to deny the people of the United States the relief to which they are so obviously entitled."

Carter Glass, chairman of the House Banking and Currency Committee, said:

"The editorial in the AMERICAN is a continuation of the excellent service performed by that newspaper during consideration of the currency bill by the Democratic caucus and in the House of Representatives. It embodies a clear, succinct statement of the provisions of the bill, and points out in a cogent way the nature of the objections urged to the measure by those interests which think more of their own pecuniary advantage than they do of their country's good."

Senator Swanson of Virginia said:

"I am delighted to see the AMERICAN throwing its great weight of influence in favor of prompt action on the currency question. It is an example that well might be followed by others. I am in favor of going ahead with this question and disposing of it without undue delay.

Currency an Old Subject.

"Currency is not, as some contend, a new subject. We have been discussing it ever since the Civil War. Commissions have studied and reported upon it at length. Professors in colleges and universities have lectured upon it, and a large amount of literature has been devoted to it. More than that the people have been thinking on the subject, and they have reached the conclusion that the time has come when Congress should act.

"That time is here. This is the Congress to deal with the currency, and there is no adding faith that we will settle the problem before we adjourn and clear our legislative slate for the problems that are to come before us in the regular session.

"I am glad to see the AMERICAN support this great measure. Its influence will be felt."

Jimmy Walsh to Meet Only Featherweights

Boston Boy Will Not Concede Eight and Ten Pounds to Rivals in Future.

By JACK CONWAY.

JIMMY WALSH, the popular Boston boxer, who was outclassed by Johnny Kilbane at the Atlas A. A., declares that in future he will only box featherweights. Walsh asserts that he cannot afford to take any more chances battling men who outweigh him by eight and ten pounds.

Walsh weighed about 121 pounds when he fought Kilbane at the Atlas Club. The featherweight champion, on the other hand, scaled at least 128 or 129 pounds. He is boxing close to the lightweight limit, and will have to do some hard training in order to reduce to the featherweight limit of 122 pounds ringside.

Walsh made a very poor showing against Kilbane, but the writer does not know of any real featherweight who would have been able to have performed as well as Walsh did.

The little Boston glove wielder is still a good performer, and there are few men of his weight in the country who are able to conquer him. Mickey Brown of Malden and Al Delmont of this city have been very persistent in hurling challenges at Walsh, but in the humble opinion of the writer, neither of these men would have much of a chance of defeating Walsh, provided that the contest was fought at 120 or 122 pounds.

Walsh would probably have been knocked out if he had tried to swap punches with Kilbane. Eight or ten pounds is a great advantage for one boxer to have over the other, especially when the man with the advantage in weight is a champion and is recognized as a real ring wizard.

SHOULD NOT CRITICISE WALSH.

WALSH believes that he has not a chance of winning from Johnny Kilbane, the lightweight, but he asserts that he would give the Cleveland youth the battle of his life if he would make 122 pounds ringside.

The Walsh boy has been criticised severely since his contest with Kilbane. It should not be so, as he was fighting against tremendous odds.

What would have happened if "Kid" Williams, Johnny Coulon, Frankie Burns, Eddie Campi or our own Mickey Brown had been in Walsh's place Tuesday night? We leave this question unanswered.

There are only a few really great boxers in New England, and we cannot afford to treat them unfairly. Jimmy Walsh is one of the cleverest glove men ever developed in this section of the country. Therefore, bury your hammer, Mr. Knocker, and recall the great battles that Walsh made against such men as Jimmy Carroll, Monte Attell, Abe Attell, Digger Stanley, Tommy O'Toole, Alf Lynch, Pal Moore, Sammy Keller, Al Delmont and Johnny Kilbane, when the latter was a legitimate featherweight.

SCORE CARD IN BOXING.

THE score card should be used in boxing more than it is. Jack Monigan of Philadelphia brought the score card into play at the recent bout between Kilbane and Walsh. After each round he marked down which boxer had the best of the fighting and the points scored by each man. Therefore, if McGuigan had been forced to give a battling decision he would have been able to have done so correctly.

Boston referees would do well to use score cards. They would then be able to give better decisions. No boy can be expected to remember every important move made by two boxers in a twelve-round contest unless he keeps some sort of a score card.

Time and again draw decisions have been rendered in this city merely because one of the boxers "finished" in the last three or four rounds of a bout, after having been outpointed for the greater part of the "go."

For example: A outpoints B for nine rounds. B fights like a champion in the last three rounds and outpoints A. Many referees would call such a bout a draw, as B made a good finish, but A should rightfully have been awarded the decision, as he really made nine points against three for it.

BOXING AND BASEBALL.

IT might be well to compare boxing with baseball. If the Red Sox were leading the Athletics by a score of 11 to 0, and the Mackmen should rally and score ten runs in the last few innings of the game, they would, nevertheless, be given a defeated combination by a count of 11 to 10. The same condition of affairs should also hold good in the ring.

BLOCK'S MEN IN LIMELIGHT.

"KID" BLOCK informs me that he has got two "coming champions" under his management. Block's battlers are Sam Sandow and Willie Green. As both young men are bantamweights, we have not yet "dopped" out whether they are each going to hold one-half of the bantamweight championship.

Sandow and Green, however, are both rugged boxers. Sandow recently showed to advantage at the Atlas Club, when he defeated Frankie Dubois of Malden in two rounds. Green is every bit as good a performer as Sandow, and will be heard from within a short time.

MORRIS KNOCKS OUT REICH IN SECOND ROUND

By ED CURLEY.

NEW YORK, Sept. 20.—He walked into the ring a nice, rosy-cheeked youth, with muscles quivering all through his body, did Al Reich last night at Madison Square Garden. A few seconds after the second round started Alfred was lying prone on the floor, for he had stopped a nasty right hook of Carl Morris' with his chin.

Whether the punch knocked him out, no one knows, but it was plainly evident Alfred couldn't get up. Thereupon he was charged with being knocked out.

From where we sat it appeared as if Alfred knew he had a sufficiency; and when you wallop a good-looking bloke on the chin he cries out in anguish, "Enough."

It was a bad piece of work to hurt the latest bomb sensation in the heavyweight division, but Morris had to do the bursting. Reich looked like a fighter, he spared like a fighter, he wore trunks like a fighter. But still he wasn't a fighter, for a fighter has to be game. That attribute Alfred left in his dressing room.

When the gladiators toppled into the arena Morris appeared bigger and also had an advantage of twenty-six pounds. The Sappa giant tipped the beam at 225 pounds, while Alfred had to weigh 200 to make the comparison truthful.

In the first round Reich displayed a lot of cleverness, although Morris wasn't behind with the fancy stuff. Morris just lapped Reich with his right, but shook Alfie's head with "nawsty" hooks. Al came out for the second full of confidence. Then he stopped.

Thus we narrate the downfall of a nice-looking boy who was being groomed for the heavyweight championship.

'Tis a hard world, mates.

The fight by rounds:

Round One.

Morris set off with a left and right to the head. Reich falling short with a left. Morris had no trouble reaching head with a left. He scored a heavy left to body and then went to a clinch. Reich showed courage in mixing with his heavier opponent and swapping. Morris landed a hard right to the head, staggering the client. Morris found his opponent on the ropes, scoring a right and left to head. As Reich backed away he caused a right on jaw that bothered Morris. They exchanged in a fast rally at the bell with honors even.

Round Two.

They exchanged in the centre of the ring, Reich falling short with a heavy right. Morris hooked both hands to the body. Morris forced and scored with left and right on the head. As Reich backed away Morris shot over a short right on the jaw, dropping Reich to the mat. Referee Joh counted ten seconds over him. Reich was still dazed as he left the ring two minutes later.

BOSTON COLLEGE MEETS MAINE IN FIRST GAME

The Boston College varsity football team will play the first game of its schedule with the University of Maine at Orono today.

Coach "Hiker" Joy and Graduate Manager Heath have announced the following lineup for the game: Ends, Fitzgerald, Revere High star last year, and Daley, a veteran; tackles, Dawson, '14, and Dan O'Connor, of Boston College High last year; guards, Brandon and Brennan, two veterans; centre, "Buck" Hurley, also a veteran; quarterback, Duffy; halfbacks, Kiley, of last year, and Craven, the Latin School star of a year ago, and fullback, Sullivan, the husky Framingham High School player. Rogers, Drummy, Burke, McCarthy, Keohane and Fleming will accompany the squad as substitutes.

The officials will be chosen from the central board of football officials.

This game will open the college season in the East, and since Maine plays Harvard, September 27, the men are anxious to make a good showing.

It is reported that Gallagher, the former Newton High star who was injured last year, will join the squad Monday.

Great Reception to A. A. U. Leader

NEW YORK, Sept. 20.—James E. Sullivan, secretary of the Amateur Athletic Union, of America and American commissioner at the Olympic games, received an enthusiastic welcome on his return from Europe.

One thousand members of various athletic associations, including the four members of the Imperial German Commission now in this country to study athletics, met him at the pier. The reception committee congratulated Mr. Sullivan especially upon the success of his efforts at the Berlin congress to standardize future international athletic games.

Walter Whittaker May Enter Tufts

Worcester Academy will probably lose its best pitcher. Walter Whittaker, it is reported, will enter Tufts Dental School.

Frank Chance Has Fighting Ball Team

Yankees Are Sure to Cause American League Clubs Trouble Next Year.

By ALLEN SANGREE.

NEW YORK, Sept. 20.—"What I needed first of all was a fighting club," said Frank Chance today.

Then Husk went on, being in a somewhat communicative mood, due solely to the fact that he is pleased with the showing his club has made since Maisel, Holden, Whitemans, et al, came into the limelight.

"Do you guess that you have a fighting club now?" inquired Friend Writer.

"You can say it over again," was Broadside Husk's reply.

"For example: Williams is now playing with a festered finger. You don't hear him squawk in the clubhouse. He's a fighter, and he will be my first baseman next year. I don't see anybody coming in who can oust him from the job.

"My second baseman will be Rollie Zeider, and I would like to say a word about this lad. His bunion, and you boys have all had a lot of fun about it, will never trouble him again. We have that from a bunion expert. The trouble with Zeider has been that seven weeks in bed weakened his legs. When he tried to throw his props went back on him.

"But Zeider is a grand ball player. And you ought to know that he can steal bases. He has some record, hasn't he?

"This brings me to Maisel, who will surely play third base. Even if this kid can only hit .240 I will take him on, because if nothing happens he will steal more bases in 1914 than Milan.

Chance Likes Peckinpaugh.

"In regard to shortstop, I like Peckinpaugh, and I think he will do to complete a fast infield, which will help me to win half the games next year.

"You see, I give you the straight dope on my infield makeup. I like all these men because they are fast and have the fighting spirit. The outfield I have not decided upon. I fancy Whiteman, Holden, Cook and Gilhooley. Here's a funny one on Gilhooley. He broke in here using a bat like a ship's mast. He couldn't swing it. I told him to use a light bat, and he went in there and made three hits.

"You ask me which is the faster, Gilhooley or Maisel? Well, the boys have been arguing it over in the club house, and each had claims he can win out in a hundred yards or around the bases. I am going to let them run it out some morning. In the outfield make-up do not overlook Cook. He is a fighter, and though I may bet him out in the minors for another year, he will be heard from. Cook has hard luck. His wife died recently. I he telegraphed me today that he would report immediately, but I wired him to stay home with the folks and report at Houston.

Houston Training Camp.

"Yes, we have decided on Houston as a training point. I tried to get San Antonio, but the place was tied up. Houston, I figure, will give us a fine climate. In fact, we are the first club to go there for a long time. For some reason or other Houston would not rent its ground to a big league club, and I think we are lucky to get in there.

"So long as we are talking about the club in general I would like to say that I have been treated wonderfully well by New York patrons and press. I tell you honestly when I had seen this club go for two weeks I offered my resignation to Frank Farrell. I told him that I could not get any baseball out of the bunch that was handed me. I told Farrell that they played baseball backwards.

"Chance said that King Cole will make a great pitcher for him next year. Cole worked under Husk in Chicago, and was let out because he would not keep in condition. He also thinks Rose, the southpaw, will be a white hope, and Rogers, the Virginia League catcher, he expects to develop into big league material after training down South.

HARTFORD, Ct., Sept. 20.—The Lowell and Hartford teams will attempt to resume their post-season series here today.

The game will be played if there is any possible chance, but from the outlook this morning the chances were very slim. The heavy rains have put the grounds in bad shape, and if the game is pulled off it will be contested on a soggy field. The series is now even, and both teams are anxious to play in order to break the tie.

CHICAGO WHITE SOX HERE TO MEET CARRIGAN'S MEN; ED WALSH IS WITH TEAM

RAY, VARDON AND OUIMET GET AWAY IN FIGHT FOR GOLF CHAMPIONSHIP

RIVAL SOX TO FIGHT IT OUT FOR 4TH PLACE

Now comes the real battle for fourth place in the American League. Today the Red Sox will be opposed by Chicago at the Fenway Park in the first of a three-game series. The Windy City team is a strong contender for a place in the first division, and judging by past battles of this season between the two clubs every game will be a scrap worth watching.

The grounds were in poor condition this morning, and but for the big canvas that is thrown over the park when rain is apparent the chances of playing today would be very slim. A big squad of groundskeepers were kept busy all morning in putting the field into the best possible shape for the game this afternoon. The contest is scheduled to start at 3 o'clock.

Red Sox Have a Three-Game Lead.

In today's standing the Red Sox hold fourth place by nearly three full games, so, in order for the White Sox to pass them, the Windy City aggregation must take the whole series.

Remembering the three defeats which the Red Sox were forced to accept on their last stop in Chicago, Manager Carrigan will undoubtedly play his full strength today and the remaining games of the series. It wouldn't be worth while for the Red Sox to throw away a place within their grasp for the sake of trying out new material, and while the recruits may perform as good as the veterans, or even better, it is always best to work the more experienced players.

Collins vs. Benz.

It is likely that Ray Collins and Joe Benz will be the pitchers in the opening game. Benz was away off form for the most part of the season, but during this swing through the East he has proved a very valuable man to Callahan.

This series will probably be a battle of pitchers, as is generally the case when these two teams meet. The White Sox have been greatly strengthened by the return of "Big Ed" Walsh, who has been sick nearly all season. Ed worked a few innings in the New York series, and it is possible that Callahan will pitch him in one of the games against the Red Sox.

It's just as possible, too, that Joe Wood may start a game, as he is in pretty good shape and would welcome the chance to get a crack at Chicago.

Russell Training Again.

Despite the fact that this is the windup of the season and a berth in the first division is all there is left for the White Sox to fight for, Reb Russell, the southpaw, is going about strictly like a rubber shirt.

That's a producer of perspiration. Likewise a producer of flesh. And if the truth must be known, the left-hander is getting heavy.

Since Reb is one of the gents who are supposed to make the Cubs contest with the Boser's end of the money in the Chicago city series, is why Manager Callahan has ordered him to wear this rubber shirt.

Breezy Paragraphs of Baseball News

As the result of the game between New York and Pittsburgh the Giants are now leading the National League race by nine games over the Phillies. The Giants took one game of a double header with the Cardinals, while Pittsburgh taking one game and being the cause of the other.

The Boston Pilgrims are now tied with the Brooklyn Dodgers for fifth place in the National League. The Dodgers took one contest of a double header with the Reds, while the Pilgrims were outplayed at every point by the Cubs.

The Cleveland Naps are scheduled to begin their last series with the Yanks in New York this afternoon. The Naps have been roughly treated by the Senators and Tigers, but are still full of fight. Ray Caldwell was slated to pitch for the New Yorks in the opening game.

It was a great pitching duel between Mathewson and Sallee in St. Louis, the Giants being beaten 1 to 0.

Rain prevented the Yankees from getting a chance to split their season's games with the White Sox. A victory yesterday would have enabled Chance to divide his twenty-two games with Jim Callahan.

Jack Mcfarla, the sensational first baseman of the Athletics, will take his place in the lineup when Connie Mack's boys go up against the Giants on October 6. Mcfarla, who was recently injured, had his arm examined under an X-ray and found no bones were broken.

Crimson Squad Gets Its Last Rest Today

Quarterbacks "Smuggled" Away by Haughton and Gardner for Two-Day Instruction

By SYDE LYNES.

TODAY is the last day of rest for the trodders of the Harvard gridiron, until the big rest comes after the final game with Yale in the Stadium. From this time on it will be a steady pull, hard work and scrimmages every day in the week, except Fridays, when signal drills will consititute the practice, and Saturdays will be taken up with battles with visiting teams.

The quarterbacks, however, are not benefiting by this luterim. Seven of them, including Bradlee, Mahan, Logan, Freedley, Watson, Carman and Rollins are off with Head Coach Haughton and Quarterback Coach Harry Gardner for a two days' spell of instruction in the proper way to lead a big team. While some of the men are old at the quarterback position, the drilling they get today and possibly tomorrow, will stand them in good stead when they line up against real teams and find themselves at the wheel.

Just where they have gone is being kept a secret as far as possible, for like unto our old friend Horace, him as we know when we open a good old toga and caught cold in our legs in Roman times, Haughton's sentiments toward the crowd are "oil profanum vulgus et arceo," from the Harvard side of the switch. That means, if there be any who by any chance does not understand it, "no peekins." And if there is one thing Coach Haughton doesn't like, it's a mob of curious ones. The "South Shore," which covers some miles and may be anything from Hull to New York, is supposed to be his destination.

RELY ON MAHAN AND BRADLEE.

MAHAN and Bradlee need all of this sort of work they can get. While they are alert men and quick thinkers, any good man being broken in to play the very responsible position of general of a team needs a lot of bolstering up. And if there are any two coaches on the Harvard staff that can do this they are Haughton and Gardner. Both of these new recruits at the job are fine men in every department of backfield work, and with the greater weight which they have they should easily multiplanese their competitors. While the other candidates have had some experience in piloting teams, Coach Haughton does not seem to have any too much confidence in them, and is playing the game safe by breaking in the new men.

SQUAD WELCOMES REST.

THE easy work which the men had yesterday because of poor weather was welcomed by the majority of the squad, for several days were pretty hot, and weight was shed like water running off a duck's back. What weight was lost, however, was purely superficial, and will be replaced if it is needed by hard beef when the training table starts early next week. The men have been getting first-class eats all this week when they cared to, as arrangements were made to feed them at the Varsity Club if they saw fit to take advantage of the opportunity.

With the exception of one or two of the backs, the men are all up to weight, and will probably not lose any more flesh. From now on it will be a hardening process. Some loss of weight is due Pennock, who at this time seems to have been in the mind of Shakespeare, when he said: "He was a man of an unbounded stomach." Mr. Pennock, however, is accustomed to this pre-season enlargement, and is first in full conviction that he will be in shape when the first game comes along.

L. H. MILLS IS DUE MONDAY.

THE squad will be enriched in line material on Monday by the arrival of L. H. Mille, '14, formerly a member of the varsity crew. He was top heavy last spring for the boat, tipping the scales at about 195 pounds, and he should be first-class timber for the varsity line with sufficient coaching. It may be remembered that Lothrop Withington came out of the varsity boat and started in football and made good with a rush. While Mills has little experience in this sort of work, he is stocky and fast and may be just he man the coaches have been looking for to fill the place at guard that has been left vacant by the removal of Trumbull to centre. While Cowen and Gilman of the freshman squad last year are good men, the former is a little slow, while the latter lacks weight.

SEPARATE SQUAD WEDNESDAY.

A division will come in the squad probably next Wednesday, as by that time there will have been a couple of scrimmages, and it will not only be evident in a degree which men should be separated from the varsity squad, but it will also be necessary for a second team to be organized with their own set of signals. Otherwise a scrimmage between the varsity and second team might closely resemble a poker game in which all hands are exposed face up on the table. And that would be of a lot of benefit to all concerned.

WHAT'S THE USE?

Pray tell me how our team came out,
I asked a baseball bug.
He looked at me with scornful eye
And shrugged a scornful shrug,
And scornfully he bent his head:
"Dost know who pitched the game?"
he said.

"I did not ask who pitched the game,"
I answered unto him.
And gazed into his laughing eye
With features dark and grim.
And scornfully he bent his head.
"Old Walter Johnson pitched," he said.

Looking over the decision in the Giant-Philadelphia case, one is led to suspect that the National League directors would last about a fraction of a moment in Canada.

Still, when we pause to reflect that an extra game means an extra herd of gate receipts, we are forced to admit that there is method in their madness.

When one realizes the ease with which National League magnates get away with it, one is not surprised at the fact that wrestling still is a paying proposition.

OUIMET WINS GOLFING TITLE IN GREAT PLAY

wait till the finish before applauding, but it was impossible to enforce the request, and time and again during the going-out round the gallery broke into a deafening cheerr.

The three players got away to good drives. The third shots of the players found Ouimet and Vardon on the green, but Ray's third shot was long and he went to the right. All three players made good approaches and putted for fives.

The tie remained during the second hole, all holing out in 4. Edward Ray fell back one stroke on the third hole, getting a poor second on his third drive and holed out after two putts in five while Ouimet and Vardon holed in four.

The three players holed out in fours on the fourth hole. Ouimet had a very misfortune on the fifth hole and lost a stroke by driving his ball out of bounds on his second shot. On his other drive, however, he got better placement than the two Englishmen and by good play recovered up the hole with his two opponents with the ball.

Vardon Leads at the Sixth.

Harry Vardon took the lead over Ouimet on the sixth hole. Vardon's second shot was close to the cup and he easily holed out in a three. Ouimet and Ray were both near the edge of the green and the best they could possibly do was to get four.

Edward Ray picked up the stroke he lost on the third hole in the seventh and tied Ouimet, holing a good three to force by Ouimet and Vardon.

This still left Vardon one up, but on the eighth hole both Ray and Ouimet made it all tie by holing perfect threes to Vardon's four.

All three players made beautiful drives and were up on the green on the second shot. Ouimet's second was the usual beautiful shot and landed on the green. His drive fell about one foot from the cup and he holed out easily in 3. Ray and Vardon displayed his ability as a putter on this hole and Ray holed out and Vardon by a perfect twenty-foot put for a three. Vardon missed his put and got a four.

The three players reached the green on their third shots on the long ninth hole and each took two putts to hole for fives.

Ouimet Leads at the Tenth.

Francis Ouimet took the lead for the first time during the tournament on the tenth green and the usual kind of cheering was heard. The tenth hole is short and all three men got their drives on the green. This green is very rolling and Harry Vardon's ball was in a bad position. Ray's ball fell just on the other side of Vardon's but was in a much better position. Ouimet's was about ten feet beyond the cup. All three approached in good fashion, but Vardon and Ray both missed their putts by close margins while Ouimet holed his out for a three and took the lead.

The eleventh hole was tied in fours Vardon and Ouimet both had good second shots that went to the green. Ray's shot hit on a small hill to the right of the green, but rolled several feet and gave him good position. All three players missed their first putts, but all holed out in fours.

Ouimet was much encouraged over his lead, but was not satisfied, and on the twelfth he increased it to two strokes up.

The drives were good, but the second shot is where Ouimet displayed his worth. His drives went within ten feet of the cup. Vardon's drive went to the left of the green in a bad position. His approach was good. Ray's long drive went to the right of the green in a bad position, but his approach was good.

Ray's long drive went to the right of the green and his third shot put the ball within a few feet of the cup. All three players missed their first putts, but Ouimet holed out in four while the two Englishmen scored fives.

Thirteenth hole—Vardon got a nine-foot putt for a 3, Ray and Ouimet took 4 each.

Fourteenth hole—All got fine tee shots of equal length. Ray sliced his second into the woods, but was out splendidly on his next. Each took 5's.

Fifteenth hole—Ray had a good lie from the tee, but was trapped on the next drive and took two to get out, which ended his chances, his total being 6. Ouimet and Vardon 4 each.

Sixteenth hole—Ray took four, but the others got out in three each.

Seventeenth hole—Ouimet got a wonderful 3 on long putt to great applause. Others 5 each. Vardon was trapped on first.

Eighteenth hole—Ouimet 4, Ray 4, Vardon 6.

Sidelights on Sports

LAST call for the White Sox. They are here for the final series of the year. If they win three straight games from the Red Sox they will shove our boys down to the second division. They cannot accomplish this result by winning two games, as it looks very much as though they will depart for the West on Monday night still in fifth place, where they are now. A year ago this time the White Sox could have come and gone without attracting more than passing notice. We were all talking world's series twelve months ago. Now, for obvious reasons, we are not talking world's series very much. We are interested more in the ability of the Red Sox to hold fourth place and in the ability of the Boston Nationals to hold fifth place.

WE have been telling each other what hard luck the Red Sox have had in going through most of the season without the services of Joe Wood. But it is well to remember that the White Sox have had the same misfortune on the fifth hole and lost a stroke by driving his ball out of bounds on his second shot. On his other drive, however, he got better placement than the two Englishmen and by good play recovered up the hole with his two opponents with the ball.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., Sept. 20.—The Boston Pilgrims came here today to complete their Western trip. This afternoon the Boston team will battle with Steve the rejuvenated Cardinals in the first of a trio of games.

Stallings hopes to make good in his last trip in St. Louis. The Pilgrims have not been very successful in the West this time and what's more they encountered rain at Chicago and Pittsburgh to make their troubles greater.

Huggins is working out a new team. He's building up for next season, as he has come to the conclusion that it's almost an impossibility to get out of the cellar. Although Boston is made up of many youngsters they play good baseball and can be depended upon to give the Pilgrims a run.

Stallings plans to try out several recruit pitchers in this series. He says he may also possibly give Davis, formerly of Rochester, and Cocreau, second baseman, a chance to show what they can do.

It would not be at all surprising if Stallings also used several youngsters in the field. This will be his last chance to look them over to play his best team against the Phillies and Giants.

Newark Needs One Game for Pennant

NEW YORK, Sept. 21. Newark now needs to win but one of its three remaining games to clinch the International League pennant. The Indians did not play yesterday because of rain, but the Rochesters, their strong rivals for the flag, lost almost their last chance to cop. Newark out for final honors by dropping one game of a double header to Toronto.

Newark's three games all are with Jersey City. Rochester has two games with Toronto. Should Newark win both of its games to remain in the running.

Hartigan Is Pleased with B. C. Candidates

The Boston College Blue School squad, which has been practically organized, is pleasing Coach Hartigan. The boys are showing good form in court scrimmages. The squad has been increased by the appearance of several new men from outside high schools. Graduate Manager Heath of the college department is looking after the men from the school and a very good schedule has been arranged.

Carl Morris May Box Here This Week

NEW YORK, Sept. 20.—Immediately after his victory over Al Reich last night as manager of a Boston fighter Harry Carl Morris $750 and traveling expenses to give sparring exhibitions during next week. Morris accepted the offer and will leave for Boston tonight. It is probable that Morris will be matched to box Tony Ross in Boston Exit week.

Featherweights Draw.

NEW YORK, Sept. 20.—Eddy Lewis and Frankie Callahan, local featherweights, battled ten rounds to a draw at Fay Rockaway last night.

Cup Defender Will Be Built of Bronze

BRISTOL, R. I., Sept. 20.—The Herreshoff sloop to be built for the Vanderbilt syndicate to enter next year's trial races for the honor of defending the America's cup against Sir Thomas Lipton's new challenger will be constructed of bronze.

This was decided after a long conference between Robert W. Emmons, 2d, of Boston, who has been appointed manager of the boat, and Nat Herreshoff, the designer. While a heavy steel boat was first considered, it was finally decided that a lighter boat would be more desirable.

It is said here that Jean H. Herreshoff, president of the Herreshoff Manufacturing Company, which is to build the Vanderbilt sloop, was at Tarrytown, N. Y., on his yacht Eugenia where he met a group of members of the New York Yacht Club to discuss plans for another syndicate, which is planning to have another Herreshoff boat in the trial races.

Wolgast and Nelson to Meet in Bout

MILWAUKEE, Wis., Sept. 20.—Ad Wolgast, former lightweight champion, and Battling Nelson, from whom Wolgast won the title, will engage in a ten-round bout here on either October 15 or October 27. Wolgast has until Monday to pick the date.

THE KING OF DIAMONDS

BY LOUIS TRACY

A THRILLING STORY OF A MODERN MONTE CRISTO

You Can Begin This Great Story Today by Reading This First

PHILIP ANSON is a lad of fifteen, of fine education and good breeding, but an orphan and miserably poor.

The story opens with the death of his mother, killed instantly by sorrow over the death of her husband two years before and subsequent want and suffering.

Rich relatives have deserted the family in their time of need, and when his mother's death comes Philip is in despair. He finds one of his mother's letters and finds that he is related to Sir Philip Morland. A few days later a terrific London storm breaks over London. At the height of the storm a flash of lightning warns a brass cyclist and a coach standing in front of a West End mansion. Philip, who has become a newsboy, receives a gift from the carriage just before it turns away. A man with the gift says to Philip in his excitement: "He sends me back and calls a policeman. You and Meeks for Philip and I need to go after learning that the man was Lord Vanstone.

Now Read On

Copyright, 1904, by Edward J. Clode.

PASSING out of the subway to the eastward street, Philip Anson stuck his head erect and hands in the pockets, strode onward at a rapid pace. The beginning was less frequent now, and the thunder was dying away in sullen rumblings. He was wet and injury. Yet, although he had three halfpence, the remaining balance of the only sense affected that evening, he passed many shops where he could have bought food.

In Piccadilly, where the excellence of the street ensured a rush of traffic, he was nearly run over, by reason of his own carelessness, and received a curse from a whip, accompanied by a kind oath from an angry coachman. He noticed but never even looked around. Crossing Piccadilly Square, he plunged through the vortex of vehicles without troubling to avoid them in the slightest degree. Once the hot breath of a gole or van horses touched his cheek, while a speechless driver pulled them back onto their haunches. Again, the off wheel of an omnibus actually grazed his heel as he sped behind the statue of Charles the First.

At last he reached the comparative seclusion of the Embankment, and stood for a moment to gaze fixedly at the swirling, glinting river.

"Not here," he muttered, aloud. "I must be nearer to mother dear—to mother! She is there, waiting for me."

He trudged steadily away, through Queen Victoria street, Cornhill, London hall street, and so on to Johnson's Mews in the Mile End road. Passers, of a markine store dealer's shop, kept to an [illegible] passenger, an Irishman, with whom he had a slight acquaintance, he entered. An elderly man was assiduously reading a paper of the preceding day's date.

"Good evening, Mr. O'Brien," he said. "Can you oblige me with a glass of rum? I want a strong piece, about three of four inches in length. I can only spare three halfpence."

"Faix, I dunno. They use nails on the crates mostly nowadays. If I have a bit it's at me service. I wouldn't be after charging the likes o' you."

Philip's story was known in that home of the needy, and the old soldier sympathized with the boy. "He has ruin against an air mistake," was his verdict when others said Philip was posed and overbearing. O'Brien moved clumsily about the squalid shop. At last he found some portion of a clothesline.

"Will that do?" he inquired.

Philip tested it with vigorous pulling against his knee.

"Excellently," he said. "Let me pay you for it."

"Arrah, go away wid ye. And, be the powers, that's the poor lad could no' furnished. Take here now in five minutes I'm goin' to have a cup o' tay."

"I am actually obliged to you, but I could not touch a morsel. I am in a hurry."

"Are ye goin' a journey? Have ye got a job?"

OMINOUS WORDS

"I think so. It looks like a person may. Goodby."

"Goodby an' good luck to ye. Sure the lad looks mighty queer. He grieve for his mother that has turned his head entirely."

No words could more clearly express Philip's condition than this friendly summing up. Since his mother's burial he had been half demented. His every suggested answers had led him two places as an errand boy which he could really have secured. His small stock of money, ridiculously depleted by the gen rosity with which he met the open hands of the undertaker's assistants, barely sufficed to keep him in food for a week. Time he sought employment, but with each stiff upper lip and haughty indifference to success that he unknowingly turned those against him who would have assisted him.

For two days he was chosen to act as run boy for a parcel delivery firm. He earned a few shillings but in a fit of exhaustion induced by the sight of a lady who was dressed in a costume similar to one he remembered his mother wearing at Dieppe, he allowed a man to be stolen from the rear of the van. This practical joke, played by a gang of roughs who mercilessly bullied any newcomer. Persons strangers and carriages were dashing against sheer of rope, and climbed the stairs. He passed irresolutely at the top, fearfully yielding to an overwhelming desire, went on and stood at the side of the bed on which his mother had died. He fancied he could see her lying there still, with a smile on her wan face and unspoken words of welcome on her lips.

A flood of tears came and he trembled violently.

"I am coming to you, mother," he murmured. "You told me to trust in God, but I think God has forgotten me. I don't want to live. I want to join you, and then, perhaps, God will remember me."

Up-to-Date Jokes

Four men were playing golf on a course where the hazard on the ninth hole was a deep ravine.

They drove off, three went into the ravine and one managed to get his ball over. The three who had dropped into the ravine walked up to have a look. Two of them decided not to try to play through, but gave up the hole. The third said he would go down and play out. He disappeared into the deep crevasse. Presently the ball came bobbing out and after a time he climbed out.

"Three."

"But I heard six."

"Three of them were echoes."

A clergyman recently engaged a boy to attend to his horse and make himself generally useful.

One of his duties was to milk a cow; but the latter, not liking the lad's clumsy method, quickly upset him, with the pail of milk on top of him.

The minister appearing on the scene, and finding the boy in tears, said to him: "Why, Jimmy, what's the matter? Has the cow been giving over spilt milk?"

"Ah's not crying over your auld milk," the boy replied, "but just look at me clothes!"

Passing Them On.

Past stall after stall went the rich merchant followed by a footman in smart livery. It was the annual village bazaar. "Ah, Miss Pritchard-Jones," said a really sweet and charming lady at one of the stalls, "and what are you going to buy? There are some good things on this table, and we have home-made cakes, aprons, pen-wipers, and——"

"Yes," said Mr. Fitzbrendon, "and I will buy just one of each. But do you know mine, my child?"

"Oh, certainly," came the ready reply, "one dollar each."

"Right!" replied the autocrat. "Then I'll take a couple—and good, footman."

"And," remarked the fair and dainty damsel, "forward, please. Two kisses for this gentleman."

For a moment the man of means was nonplussed, but only for a moment. Then he turned to his footman.

"James," he said, coolly, "just take this purchase, please."

Nation Building

Selected by EDWIN MARKHAM

THE vivid vistas of places and performances in our national history. I recommend you to Hubert Howe Bancroft's "Retrospection." An enamel rail review of the nineteenth century. Now that everybody is out upon the Summer roads of the land consider the outline of the beginning of the great roads of the nation.

"Looking over the first half of the last century there may seem little to astonish crude and progress slow. But the truth, great as were the works of the second half, the works of the first half were relatively great. For those from that were conceived and brought forth by the American people retain industrial achievements, to say nothing of political and society, which exerted a powerful influence upon the advancement of the country in peace and prosperity, and which, considering the time and place, and the result of human effort, with the resources at command, may be likened to work on the pyramids of Egypt or the great wall of China.

"These enterprises were the construction, during the years 1811 to 1852, of the national turnpike 834 miles in length, from Fort Cumberland on the Potomac through Indiana and Illinois to Jefferson City, Missouri; the Erie Canal, in 1817-25, from the Hudson River to Lake Erie, with other hundreds of roads and canals, and the opening of rivers and lakes, to steam navigation.

"Already at the opening of the century [illegible] the waterways of western expansion had been sought out and planted, and the Ohio, the Mississippi and the Missouri became the great highways of emigration. And the first Conestoga turnpike, the first national road, going in the meantime, by steamboat was available from Pittsburgh and Braddock routes. Tolls were collected over the greater part of the way.

"Over this thoroughfare poured a stream of population, thousands from the north and east, to lower valley of the south States, which, percolating through the minor channels of intercommunication, mingled the middle-northern inhabitants, and overspreading the plains beyond crossed the mountains and deserts, finally mingling upon the golden shores of the Pacific.

"The Erie Canal, then the largest in the world, out of which Governor Clinton of New York was father, stimulated progress at the East and in the lake region, and the opening of the Atlantic water communication with the great inland seas. The cities on New York were marvelous, equally it is about forward rapidly in population and pass Philadelphia.

"A thousand flotboats and barges floated down the Ohio carrying empire to the mighty lands beyond the Mississippi. These were followed by the steamboat, which ushered an era in unprecedented progress."

BEHIND CLOSED DOORS

By Anna Katharine Green

One of the Greatest Mystery Stories Ever Written

TODAY'S INSTALMENT

Copyright, 1903, by Anna Katharine Green.

STRUCK to his very heart of hearts, Dr. Cameron reeled where he stood, but only for a moment; the next he was on the threshold of Molesworth's room.

Mrs. Olney met him before he could pass within.

"Oh!" she cried, "he has been calling for you. Not an hour of the night but he has murmured your name. He is very ill, and does not know the face of any one who goes near him. To think he should have come back for this."

Cold as stone, and with a heart like lead, Dr. Cameron stepped by her and approached the bed. Good God! was this the same man he had parted from yesterday? He could not believe his eyes, he could not believe his understanding. He stared at the poor, hollow-eyed, delirious creature before him, and had neither words nor thoughts. He was only conscious of hopes that went down, down, down.

"It is a bad case of acute pneumonia," whispered a soft voice into his ear. "If he rallies again it will be only for a few minutes; nothing short of his own will could save him, and that he will never be able to exercise again. Don't you agree with me, sir?" His pulse is so and so, and his temperature——"

If answer was expected, it did not come; Dr. Cameron did not even know who spoke to him.

"Julius!" he whispered. "Julius, do you not know me, Walter Cameron?"

But the wild, feverish eyes had no understanding in them, and neither turned nor softened at this passionate appeal. Frantically the doctor rose to his feet and approached the ingleside.

"He is slipping from us," he cried, "and we shall never know what secret he conceals in that heart of his. Will you stay with me till this belief becomes certainty, or can you trust me to watch by his side alone?"

"Gryce is here," answered the inspector. "He has been with him I believe, all night. He will stay with you."

The doctor hastened at once to the telephone. Having been put in communication with his own home, he asked for news, and receiving answer that his wife's condition remained unchanged, gave orders that he was to be informed if she showed any signs of returning consciousness. Then he went back to Molesworth's side.

"He does not know you," whispered Mrs. Olney, "and yet he seems quieter since you came in. Hark! there he is calling your name again."

A PITEOUS CRY

And sure enough, a piteous "Walter! Walter Cameron!" broke that moment from the sick man's lips, and going to the heart of the watcher, brought the tears to those stern eyes, which all but unwonted had not been able to call forth.

And thus, for a couple of hours, when without warning there came a change, and the dying man looking up, knew Cameron, and breathed a soft sigh that sounded so natural that the latter took heart, and, bending over him, said:

"You have something to tell me, Julius. It will take but one breath, and will make me your debtor forever. Which sister did I marry? Answer me that, dear friend, and I will ask you nothing more."

And for a moment it seemed as if the sick man would answer; for he opened his lips and endeavored to speak, but failed.

"Oh, God! Oh God!" cried Dr. Cameron in despair; "must I see him die with that one word unsaid? Julius, Julius, you can lift your hand. If it is Genevieve Gregory who is now my wife raise your right hand."

It did not move.

"If it is Mildred Farley, raise up your left."

That did not move.

"Cannot you tell me," pursued Cameron, wildly, "or will you not? You say you love me; show it now. Your right hand, Molesworth, or your left. Genevieve or Mildred, which is it?"

But though a strange, yearning look came into the dying man's face, he did not stir, and the doctor seeing it, desisted from his efforts and put as if were all selfish thoughts away from between them, and bending down, reverently kissed the forehead, damp now with the dews of death.

A thrill that seemed to have nothing but happiness in it passed slowly towards Walter, and gave it one earnest pressure. Then the deep, unreadable eyes faintly closed as it were, forever, when Dr. Cameron, stooping hearer, murmured in his ear:

"Bridget Halloran walked the length of the ward for the first time today, and you have received the credit."

Instantly a smile shone out on those pale lips, and the eyes opened again with a look that Dr. Cameron was in vain trying to read, when a well-known voice murmured slowly and solemnly in his ears:

"It is all over, doctor; we must find some other way of getting at the truth you want."

The Great Question.

"SOME other way? What other way?" A little time had passed, and Dr. Cameron stood in the parlor alone with Mr. Gryce. The detective meditated. He had passed his prime, but he was the great Gryce yet. How should he find his way out of this difficulty?

"I cannot wait," pursued the doctor, "for the slow process of comparison and investigation. I must know at once and without a doubt whom I have been cherishing in my bosom."

"And we," subjoined the other, "must also know." And his tone became curt and businesslike. "What was the last word from your home?" he asked.

"That my wife had moved again, but slightly."

An expression passed over the detective's face, which, if it had been seen by those who knew him best, would certainly have aroused great curiosity and interest. For he only looked thus when he had made some famous discovery or originated some deep-laid plan calculated to settle a vexed question.

"You want to know," he cried, "how we can all be satisfied as to which of the sisters you have under your roof in the person of Mrs. Cameron?"

"Yes."

"I will tell you."

"And, leaning forward, he whispered some earnest and impressive words into the doctor's ear.

Gladstone's Early Wit

Gladstone, when a boy, was visiting in the county and a farmer was showing him around. Coming to a field that contained a large, black bull, the farmer said:

"There's a fine strong bull there, Master William, and it's only two years old."

"How do you tell its age?"

"Why, by its horns," said the farmer. "By its horns!" Young Gladstone looked thoughtfully a moment, then his face cleared. "Ah, I see! Two horns—two years."

He Counted

"Go and see if there are any crows in that field of corn," said the farmer to his new hired hand.

The boy presently came back with the news that he had counted fifty-four.

"Did you drive them away?" asked the farmer.

"No, sir," replied the boy; "I thought they were all yours."

Stop Canning Spoiled Food, Warns Cassidy

Mr. Cassidy has received a very instructive circular from the National Canners' Association regarding the care of canned food. This bulletin is in line with the recent establishment by the association of a laboratory in Washington under the direction of Dr. W. D. Bigelow, a former associate of Dr. Wiley in the Federal Food Bureau. Mr. Cassidy gives this bulletin the advantage of the AMERICAN'S circulation, that it may reach everyone who has to do with handling of canned food.

By HARRY P. CASSIDY.

I have had several complaints made to me, largely of some of the foreign substances found in canned food. Some of these substances plainly show that the material used in canning the corn, peas, tomatoes, etc., was of a filthy character and carelessly handled.

The National Canners' Association has sensed this widespread demand for the purest of canned foods and is working through the trade to educate dealers to use the best of materials and methods in their business.

Admirable as the work is, I fear that the canners' campaign of education does not reach the small grocer or dealer. And that's where the work really counts.

As the canners' bulletin contends, too many dealers feel that once proper care has been used in the packing of canned food, their responsibility ends. This is a most unfortunate viewpoint and needs prompt correction.

Damage to canned goods may result from improper handling to both the container and contents. There is always danger from rusty cans. Rusty cans come from storing in damp warehouses. Once the rust starts it may penetrate through the can and spoil the contents.

Rust can be prevented by lacquering. Lacquering is now regarded as an excellent preventative of damage from the outside.

Canned foods should not be stored or kept where they will freeze. Slight freezing does not seriously injure the quality, but it adds no improvement.

If cans are once frozen they should be kept frozen. Frequent short freezings are much more injurious than one continuous freeze. Freezing softens fruit more or less and destroys its characteristic flavor. The effect of a hard freeze is to break some of the cans.

I would say to the grocer, don't store canned goods where there is excessive heat, as against radiators or steam pipes. Heat injures the quality more rapidly than does cold. The ultimate effect is just the same—softening of contents and loss of flavor. Color may also be affected. Pears and peaches may be made more or less pink and fruits with a high color may assume a gray tint.

When a grocer receives his shipment of canned goods he should open the cases and examine for can leaks. Cans which have been dented or mashed in shipment or handling should be sorted out and disposed of early.

If the Canners' Association is sincere in its work, and I believe it is, it should frown upon the practice of re-processing canned goods known to the trade as "swells."

A "swell" may come from fermentation and sometimes from overfilling. I have in mind a place right here in Boston that makes a practice of buying "swells" from the trade and re-cooking the contents.

Such stuff is not fit for food and should be kept from channels of sale. Let the Canners' Association use the tremendous power it wields for pure food and, stop this too common practice.

Blanche Arral, Famous Soprano, Finds Cure For Fat In Java

Grand Opera Star Takes Off 34 Pounds of Bulky Fat in Four Weeks Without Drugs or Diet.

JAVANESE WOMAN.

Blanche Arral, famous grand opera star now singing in this country, possesses a figure that is well nigh physically perfect. Those who have not seen the popular little diva, on this, her latest visit, may well be surprised at such a statement, for on her last appearance here, some time ago, she was so decidedly stout that her appearance in such roles as Carmen and Juliet aroused unfavorable criticism and some amusement, largely offsetting the marvelous beauty of her voice.

As a matter of fact, Mme. Arral has dieted and put 34 pounds of bulky fat, lost a disfiguring double chin, and to the unexpected, looks at least fifteen years younger.

"When I left America," says Mme. Arral, "I felt unwell. Oh, so rapidly, until really I was ashamed to appear on the stage. Besides fat made my health miserable and affected my voice. My heart pounded like a trip hammer at the slightest exertion. I was weak and tired all the time. It seemed as though my feet and ankles could not bear my weight. I was dull, heavy, stupid in mind, unable to sleep nights or digest my food. My condition became so terribly serious that I realized that unless I got rid of this fat that was pressing in on all my vital organs, I might drop dead at any moment.

"I had previously tried, I believe, every method of fresh reputation known to medical science. I used drugs, starvation diets, purging, rolling, paddling, exercising, long walks, special garments, etc., but they did me more harm than good.

"Finally, while touring Australia, my health broke down completely, my voice failed me. I was obliged to give up all work, and went for a complete rest and a long vacation to the little-known island of Java. At the hands of a native Indian priest, I found a complete cure for all my troubles. I used no drugs, diets or exercise, but took each day, under his direction, a pleasant, simple native treatment such as I had never heard of before. The result was astounding. In four weeks I lost just 34 pounds. Every ounce of superfluous flesh had gone, my lost voice returned, my double chin vanished, and my health today is perfect. My mind is clear and buoyant, and I truly feel as though I had stepped from a hazy darkness into the bright glorious sunlight.

Mme. Arral's remarkable experience, which has been rather widely quoted in the American press, has created widespread interest and she has been fairly deluged with requests for information and personal treatment. Her concert engagements make this impossible, of course, but in answer to the call of the multitude of requests for information, she has written a little pamphlet fully relating her own experience and giving the exact daily routine by which any woman may duplicate for herself the same happy result without danger, discomfort or loss of time.

She has been mailing these books without charge, and as they have been written her, but has a few hundred copies left. Arrangements have been made whereby these will be distributed without charge, among interested readers who will write for it, inclosing a two-cent stamp to cover postage. Mme. Arral's permanent address while in America, will be 1184, Miller Bldg., Scranton, Pa., and all letters and requests for the book sent there will receive prompt attention.

Beatrice Fairfax on:

The Girl Who Is Jilted

What Shall She Do? A Girl Who Has to Run After a Man Never Gets a Man Worth Running After

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

THE young man fell in love, dem in love, or at least he acted as if that was what he was doing.

He never left the girl alone a minute. He followed her from pillar to post and back to the pillar again. He wrote poetry and he sang and he sent flowers and he told her she was the prettiest thing alive, and he talked about a bungalow, and a little garden, and just they two together on the porch, and he bought a ring—and then—he went away.

At first he wrote—oh, such beautiful letters—silly her mother thought them, but they weren't silly to the girl. She smiled over them and cried over them and hid them under her pillow at night—and answered them and waited for the postman—and now he's stopped writing.

She noticed that the letters were not quite so sweet as they used to be—first they were shorter, then they came seldomer and then—they stopped altogether. She knows the man is well, for she took pains to find that out. Now, then, what shall she do?

She was to write to him every day—she does write a half-dozen letters a day—and tears them up.

SAD LETTERS

Sad letters—letters that try to be gay and alluring, letters with a sob in every line, letters that sound like a fit of love-price—letters that are an agony of appeal—calm, reasonable letters—firm letters—all kinds—tear them all up, little girl, tear them all up except the friendly ones and only send one of those.

If you are really engaged to the man, it is your right to know what is the matter with him. Don't risk your life's happiness for a silly reserve—write him and ask him what's the matter—you could do that to your own brother, couldn't you? That will give him his chance, and that's what you want to do—give him his chance—and yours—to get out of what may be a disagreeable situation for you both.

No, don't appeal to his pity, don't try to bring him back what he once felt for you. That isn't fair; it isn't fair to him—or to yourself.

If he wants to get away from you now—you can't let him go fast enough. If you can't hold him before marriage, what in the world would you do once you were just his wife. And, then, if he isn't honest—it isn't square to make a man actually break with you. Let him give you the chance to do that.

Whatever else you do, don't lose your pride. That will help you through when nothing else on earth will—oh yes, I know the world swims under your feet at the very idea that he doesn't care for you as he did—you want to die—you pray to stop living—just now.

You think it will last forever, this misery, this lonely gnawing at your heart—Oh! no, oh! no, it will not—it will not—nothing lasts—nothing, not even happiness, not just the same way.

A year from now you'll have trouble to remember the color of his eyes, and five years from now, when somebody asks you where he is, you'll have a time trying to think when it was that you last saw him.

Oh yes you will, you aren't so different from all the rest of the world—you aren't the first to cried out in joy from your very heart and live and laugh afterwards.

Others have gone through with it, so can you.

Don't let anyone know, don't let anyone dream what it is you suffer, for, when all is gone, good old honest pride will come and say: "Lean upon me, little sister," and first you know your heart will stop aching, and then how glad you'll be that you kept your own counsel.

And the man—don't be too bitter about him—he's in trouble, too.

It is a bad thing for a decent man to find out that he has made a mistake like that—don't make it any harder for him—or for yourself.

Love, love—oh yes, it makes the world go round, all right—but you haven't bid farewell to love just because one young man isn't writing to you every day in the week and twice on Sundays.

And whisper—when you want a man to run after you—you pick up your skirts and run—just as fast as you can—if he has a particle of sporting blood in him he'll take after you as fast as he can—it's the nature of the animal.

WRITE TO HIM

Write this particular young man a letter, kindly, friendly, puzzled—ask him what is the matter—then if he doesn't answer that, or if he answers it in some sort of huff way maybe and maybe not—forbear—drop him and drop him quickly.

That's the best way, that's the only way—a girl who has to run after a man never gets a man worth running after—all the decent ones can run so much faster than she can—and they will do it, too—the minute they even suspect they hear her little high heels pounding down the road after them.

For so they are made—be sure of that if you are not sure of another thing on earth.

Daysey Mayme and Her Folks

Doing Without Meat.

THE absence of the big framed picture of Beatrice De Cenci from the parlor wall of the Lysander John Appleton home is at last explained—Daysey Mayme appeared yesterday at a meeting of the Upward, Onward Movement Club, wearing it for a breastpin.

The little of her face that appeared above the pin and below her hat was enough to convince those who saw her that her heart was heavy and sad. Even the tip of a nose may express its sorrow.

The motive of the Upward, Onward Movement Club is to reduce household expenses. Instead of staying at home long enough to boil a cheap cut of meat till it is good, the members of this club meet three times a week to denounce the packers.

The strength of their maternal ancestors devoted to the meat chopper has made tough meat tender, they expend in wielding the gavel.

They are extremely fashionable, modern and progressive.

Member after member arose and read papers denouncing the most tried and mourning the default a large porterhouse leaves in a small salary, and some of the more courageous members advocated marching on the butcher shops a la Albany.

Daysey Mayme arose, and the voice that echoed from behind her big hat and breastpin was muttered sadly and:

"I wish," she said, "that the names of the Appleton family be dropped from membership of the Upward, Onward Movement Club."

There was a deed silence. She had been its most active member.

"All of our family made a vow at the last meeting," she continued, "that we would do without meat. We have been untrue to our vows. We have transgressed."

Visions of a tempting, juicy steak flitted before the eyes of her audience. Ah, the flesh is weak.

Daysey Mayme read their thoughts. "We fell," she continued, "but not as you are thinking.

"We vowed no meat should come into our house, and we devoted ourselves to a diet of apples and nuts.

"But we found," here she showed signs of hysterics, for the experience had been fraught with unrest, "that in eating apples and nuts we were eating as much meat in the worms in them as we had eaten when patronizing the butcher."

She staggered from the room. She felt she must have air.

The members looked at each other. Her confession explained the claim made by dietitians regarding the nutrition found in apples and nuts.

They shook their heads wisely.

"Nonsense!. Don't believe that old woman's talk," said his friend.

"Been a death in your street yet?" he asked Jim the next day.

"Yes," was the reply.

"Eh? Who?" inquired the unbeliever in dismay."

"Toe cock! I sleeps at night now," said Jim, with a look full of meaning.

A Happy Bald Headed Man

Well-Known Politician Nearly Bald Now Has Heavy Growth of Hair.

Tells How He Did It.

A Western politician, well known on account of his baldness and ready wit, surprised his friends by appearing with a thick growth of hair; many of his old friends did not know him and others thought he had a wig. On being asked how he did it, he made the following statement: "I attribute the remarkable growth of my hair to the use of the following simple recipe which any lady or gentleman can mix at home: To a half pint of water add 1 oz. of bay rum, a small box of Barbo Compound and ¼ oz. of glycerine. Apply to the scalp two or three times a week with the finger tips. It not only promotes the growth of the hair but removes dandruff, scalp humors and prevents the hair from falling out. It darkens streaked, faded, gray hair and makes the hair soft and glossy. These ingredients can be purchased at any drug store at very little cost and mixed at home."

"My Own Beauty Secrets"

BY ANNA HELD

No. 3—The Correct Way to Bathe.

By ANNA HELD

Reading "Anna Held's All Star Variety Jubilee," Under Management of John Cort.)

Copyright, 1913, by International News Service

DO you bathe?

But, of course, yes—and I suppose you are very angry with me for asking such a question.

Well, I shall put it more definitely now—DO YOU BATHE CORRECTLY? Do you actually understand the art of keeping clean?

A Striking Group of Photographs of Miss Held. Posed Exclusively for This Page.

It is not simple at all.

Bathing does not merely mean entering a tub of water or allowing a shower to play over you.

Bathing means setting the skin aglow through proper exercise, through proper use of the bath and through proper enriching and cleansing of the blood.

Madame, Mademoiselle, and even Monsieur, will you bear with me patiently while I explain all the steps of the great foundation of all beauty—absolute cleanliness?

The bath must carry off all impurities and leave the skin fine and white and satiny. The bath must call the good red blood to the surface to feed the tissues. I once felt that milk baths were the particular tonic that my skin needed. But now I have found a simple remedy for troubled skins and a delightful aid for fine-textured skins. It is what we French call "son." I think it is bran in your delightful language. At any grocery shop you may buy bags of this very cheaply, since it is the chaff left from the "corn" of which bread is made.

HOW TO DO IT

Allons! To proceed. Fill great bags of soft white cheesecloth with the bran and place them in the tub in which you are letting a pure stream of hot water run.

A soft, flour-like substance will exude from the bags of bran, and your bath will take on a milky appearance. Enter and lave your body in the cleansing, purifying water. Scrub your skin with the bran-bags.

It will slough impurities and dead skin. It will set your blood racing and coursing through your body. At the end of this bath your skin will be of a satin white texture—soft and pliable, clean and healthy.

Twice a week I take these warm bran baths. And every morning I have my cold plunge to tone up skin and flesh to the firm hardness of the healthy athlete's flesh. Before my bran bath, and before my cold plunge, I always unfailingly take some physical culture exercises.

To properly enjoy a bath, to properly get its full cleansing effect you must enter it warm, glowing and supple. Five minutes of simple exercise every morning will make you supple, graceful and pliable. Your skin and flesh as well as your figure must be flexible, and must respond to your every movement with easy grace.

Physical culture is the simplest form of exercise. Stretch your arms up, down, forward and back to the rhythm of deep breathing. Flex your knees and kick gently and not high enough to strain unused muscles. Bend from your waist—forward, back to the side. Stretch your torso about in circles with the waist as a pivot.

If your heart is quite strong try a little motion as if you were skipping a rope. Then when you are warm and glowing—alive and vital, with every muscle pliable and your blood stimulated to action—leap into your bath. Your whole system will respond to the cleansing laving of the water. You will come out clean and fresh and ready for the day's work.

And now do not spoil your work by injudicious use of food. Does coffee make your heart flutter and thump? Are you putting on unhealthy flesh? Then drink tea with lemon. The lemon will be a cleansing factor for your internal system.

Fruit is very important to keep the intestines and digestive tract clean as it is to keep skin and flesh clean. In fact, it is a part of your bathing. If you do not properly digest, assimilate and throw off food it will poison your blood.

VALUABLE RULES

If you eat something which sober second thought tells you that you cannot digest, salts are a safe way of eliminating the poison from your system. Always make sure that nature is properly caring for your foods, and if for some reason she needs help, give it to her. Don't be afraid of salts in moderation.

Properly taken they simply bathe and cleanse the system. Keep your blood pure by internal cleanliness. This will aid you in your search for a fine complexion and clear skin and healthy flesh instead of unhealthy and unsightly fat.

For breakfast I take tea with lemon and eat biscuits—crackers, I think, you would call them. For lunch I have some grilled meat and a green vegetable or a bit of salad.

Grilled—broiled is the more American-sounding word, is it not?—meats are the best. Roasted meats come next. But stewed, boiled and fried meats are alike indigestible and fattening. Green vegetables cleanse the system—and it is of cleansing we speak.

Carrots are fine for complexion because they are blood cleansers and purifiers. Ah, yes! Little tender carrots are popular with blood, nerves, digestion and complexion! Let me tell you how I always eat them. You may call them "Carrots a l'Anna" if you will be so friendly.

Cut them up in little dice and throw them into a saucepan that has butter in it. Add pepper and salt for seasoning, and cover the spider so that the raw carrot may cook in the steam of the butter. Don't add water, and don't cook before you begin simmering them in the steam and butter. Add them to your menu and add my bran bath to your list of "swims," and I am sure you will feel clean, healthy and glowing.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

HAVE YOU TOLD YOUR FATHER

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I am eighteen and lead company with a man about six months. I found that he was not the son of a man I would like, so I did not encourage him any more. We did not have a quarrel.

I keep company with another young man now, and if I am with him, my girl friends, or about, he follows me wherever I go.

S. R. U.

A GIRL'S father, or a brother, is in position to put an end to insulting attentions like these. If both are powerless, appeal to the police. You must not risk your personal safety by letting him follow you around in this manner.

HE OWES AN EXPLANATION

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I am a girl of eighteen and have been keeping company with a gentleman about my age and dearly love him. He returned my love.

Now, for the past two weeks he has stopped speaking to me, for reasons I do not know.

Kindly advise me what to do, as I am heartbroken.

FLORENCE.

I DO not like the manner of treating you. As a husband he is likely to be even more ruthless in his disagreeable moods.

You must write a note asking if you have offended. Do this for Love's sake, for your own sake try to forget him if he refuses to reply. You have done no wrong. Don't be too humble.

RESPECT YOUR MOTHER'S WISHES

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I am eighteen years old and recently I met a man of a dozen who I think cares for me very much. My mother objected to my going with him without giving me her reason.

Kindly advise me what to do, as I love him very much. B. L. K.

I BELIEVE your mother makes a mistake in not telling you her objections, but this will not excuse you for not heeding them, nor make them less reasonable.

Do just as she says. Trust her. No girl ever made a mistake by trusting her mother.

TODAYS STOCK MARKET

By W. H. ROSS, Financial Editor.

Stocks were less active at the short session today and the price range was downward in the instance of many issues. Locally valuations were irregular. In New York most leaders closed at declines. Changes were small, however, and without much significance. The weather had depressed sentiment and there was little public interest shown.

In Boston at the end Boston Elevated was 1 ¾ lower, New Haven had shaded, Boston & Maine was up ¼ and United Fruit was down ½. Mines were irregular. Calumet & Arizona was off 1 and Superior and Isle Royale a little lower, while Butte & Superior, North Butte and Shattuck were fractionally higher. Wolverine and Mohawk had advanced a point each. There had not been much change in New York.

The New York bank statement was as follows, in brief: Average statement: Excess over reserve, $8,690,700, increase, $4,083,950; loans, decrease, $7,021,000; specie, increase, $1,000,000; legal tenders, increase, $29,000; net deposits, decrease, $8,125,000; circulation, increase, $12,000. Actual statement: Loans, decrease, $7,883,000; specie, increase, $5,427,000; legal tenders, decrease, $1,050,000; net deposits, decrease, $6,876,000; reserve, increase, $5,220,700.

Stocks Ranged Lower in New York.

At the opening in New York the price range was lower. Union Pacific began at 159¾ with a gain of ½. C. & O. and Chino Copper also made trifling gains which were soon lost.

Among the declines were Utah Copper ½, Steel common ¼, Southern Pacific ½, Southern Pacific certificates ⅞, Reading ½, Northern Pacific ¼, New Haven ¼, New York Central ¼, Missouri Pacific ¼, Lehigh Valley ¼, Erie ⅛, Canadian Pacific 1¼, California Petroleum ⅝, American Car and Foundry ¼, and Amalgamated ⅛.

There was no session of the London Stock Exchange and there were a number of selling orders cabled here for international issues.

The Curb was heavy.

More Trust Busting Coming.

The Wilson administration, it is thought at Washington, is going to delve deep in an effort to learn if anti-trust laws are being violated and the campaign of Attorney-General McReynolds may prove the most far-reaching of drs kind ever undertaken.

It is said that the New York, New Haven & Hartford Road will get all the attention that evidence warrants, and that enough of the latter has been discovered to justify the preliminary investigation which the Department of Justice will begin in about a fortnight. The opinion is expressed at the capital that the government's first case in this case will be a civil suit to dissolve what is alleged to be a transportation monopoly in New England.

The Attorney-General, it is stated, has decided to utilize to the fullest extent ways through the courts, by means of confining anti-trust inquiries, as has been the custom, to the few specific defendants in the interest of justice.

It was pointed out today that a man-hunt does not begin until indictments and G. Carroll Todd, his assistant in charge of anti-trust work. There are many cases pending, especially a large number filed in the closing days of the 74th session, which must be prepared for trial. In addition, investigations of great moment have been undertaken, and surely a day passes that the department does not hear of some new trust.

No Tariff Report on Monday

There is no expectation now that tariff conferees will be able to report an agreement on the bill to the Senate on Monday, as they were deadlocked on a number of important items when they adjourned.

Chairman Simmons has announced that the reports that the bill as agreed to in the Senate would not yield sufficient revenue were without justification. Experts informed him that as at present drawn and agreed to the bill will produce an income that should give the government a surplus of $16,000,000 in a normal year.

Not to Stay in Southern Pacific.

Wall Street hears that the Pennsylvania management wishes to dispose of that road's interest in Southern Pacific and not only will not seek representation in the latter's directorate, but would like to sell the $32,292,400 Southern Pacific stock held by Pennsylvania as an investment.

"Pennsylvania never wanted any of its surplus cash in Southern Pacific stock," it is said. "Baltimore & Ohio shares were good enough for the management, but its holdings of this road's shares, amounting to $42,547,200, had to be disposed of in answer to public criticism of its ownership of practical control of a competitor."

When the Pennsylvania decided to bow to public opinion the market for all classes of securities was in the doldrums. The holdings would have had to be sacrificed had they been placed in the open market.

Owing to the recent sale of the remainder of the Union Pacific's holdings of Southern Pacific stock, amounting to $88,000,000, the security market is not in shape to absorb $38,000,000 additional Southern Pacific held by the Pennsylvania. No sale of the shares is therefore expected at this time. Instead they could, however, be pledged as collateral for a short term loan until sold."

Financial News in Brief.

Owing to President Wilson's wishes the House will stay in session while the Senate wrestles with the currency bill that the former has passed. This displeases Republicans, who wanted a vacation and chance to go home. But Democrats have a plan to appease them by "pairing."

It is inferred that consumers may not benefit by free sugar, as they have not since the war, but that they may get cheaper through market fluctuations. The Government Bureau of Statistics states that the world's crop is not large enough for raw sugar to produce one pound of refined sugar has fluctuated greatly, while the price of refined sugar has remained almost stationary, the profits apparently being absorbed by refiners and middlemen. All cane sugar is refined in America.

Chicago and Northwestern broke all records for cross earnings in its last fiscal year, their increasing more than $9,000,000 to $85,435,567. Surplus, after deducting dividends and all charges, amounted to $3,173,407. Earnings on common stock were almost 10 per cent, compared with 8 1-5 in the previous year.

It is estimated that steel mills of the country are now operating at an average of 90 per cent. of capacity. Buying continues scattered.

For the year ended with June, the New York, Ontario & Western reports gross earnings of $9,454,349, as compared with $8,527,944 last year, with net earnings of $2,724,217, against $1,707,477 the year previous.

SATURDAY, SEPT. 20

REP. LEWIS R. SULLIVAN OF WARD 20, DOR.

This is a Democratic representative who did not hesitate to cast a vote satisfactory only to the all-righteous railroad monopoly. Mr. Sullivan voted for the Western Trolley Merger Bill which gave to this powerful monopoly the street railways in more than one-half the State. Another man might have felt bound to carry out the promises of the Democratic party platform when it said: "WE ARE OPPOSED TO THE OWNERSHIP OR CONTROL OF OUR STREET RAILWAYS BY STEAM RAILROADS, AND WE BELIEVE THAT IT SHOULD GO NO FARTHER IN THIS COMMONWEALTH," but not Mr. Sullivan.

Another man might have felt that the interests of the State were best served by following the advice of impartial railroad experts in this matter, such as the Tax Commissioner, the Railroad Commission, the Boston Chamber of Commerce, the Public Franchise League, the Massachusetts Real Estate Exchange and the Interstate Commerce Commission; but Mr. Sullivan was wise enough to know that these impartial opinions should be disregarded and he should follow the wishes of the railroad monopoly.

Do you think that this man should be allowed to represent you any longer? A vote to renominate this man and put him on the same ballot with Mr. Walsh is a vote to tie Mr. Walsh up with a railroad tool and put Mr. Walsh on the defensive in the campaign and keep him explaining and apologizing for his painful association with a man whom he regards as a party traitor.

'De Luxe' Diary Calls Gary a 'Hard Nut'

CHICAGO, Sept. 20.—A diary found in the wonderful trunk of the Tomlinson Hames Co., dealers in "de luxe" books and works of art, today revealed that former Judge Robert H. Gary was one of the big men on whom the new bunkum firm made ambitious efforts to unload its "de luxe" publications.

Herbert O. Tomlinson, who tried to "land" Judge Gary, said those pithy notations at dates covering a period of many weeks:

"Looks good."
"Much brighter."
"May land."
"Hard nut."
"Impossible."

Several paintings were sold to E. P. Clark of Los Angeles for $125,000 almost immediately after they had been bought for $35,000.

Speaker Clark Hopes for German Exhibit at Fair

Editor, AMERICAN:

It is greatly to be hoped that the government of the German Empire will finally conclude to participate in the Panama-Pacific Exposition at San Francisco, celebrating the completion of the most stupendous engineering undertaking in the history of the human race, a beneficent accomplishment of which men have dreamed and for which they have hoped since the day when Balboa first looked with delight upon the Peaceful Ocean.

Americans are very fond of the Germans. Indeed, several millions of our people were born and bred in the Fatherland and are among our best citizens. All of us, whether of German extraction or not, would be delighted to welcome representatives of the German Empire to our shores.

Be Patient with Fools---That Is a Most Important Art

If It Were Not for "the Fools," the Wise Man Would Be Less Prosperous. He Might Worry

Copyright, 1913, International News Service.

There lived in the West a very wise, powerful man, whose son, just out of college, was running a newspaper.

The son in his early twenties complained bitterly to his father that he had frequently to deal with fools who could not grasp an idea.

The father replied solemnly, "You must learn to be patient with fools, my son. There are many of them, they form a large part of the population.

"If you don't understand them, you can't understand the population. And, my boy, you and I might not be as well off as we are if there were fewer fools in the world."

There was wisdom boiled down into few words, readers. Take the wisdom to yourself, and make it useful.

Let us all, dearly beloved, learn to be patient with fools—and especially with those that in our majestic self-conceit we mistakenly THINK are fools. It happens sometimes, in this queer world, that the individual we take for a fool is something quite different.

All of those who looked at Newton, the greatest mathematician that ever lived, said, when he was a boy, that he was a fool and always would be. He was fussing in the sand, instead of doing something else. They didn't know that he was working out mathematical problems in the dust with a piece of stick.

Michelson, of the University of Chicago, one of the greatest living scientists and winner of the Nobel prize, went to Annapolis with other young gentlemen, studying to be a fierce naval fighter. The other young gentlemen nick-named him "Feeble Efforts."

Nobody would remember any of THEM, unless it be because they were at the Naval Academy WITH MICHELSON. He corrected men's knowledge as to the speed of light, and thus corrected all measurements of distances in space. And, incidentally, he is just concluding experiments testing "the rigidity of the earth," which demonstrates the fact that this earth is twice as rigid as it would be made of solid steel.

Interesting to those that have brains.

Let us, as we have said, learn to be patient with fools, and also, whenever possible, let us learn to realize that it is ourselves and not the other man who is the fool—very often.

There are fools in the world—many of them, millions of them.

But there is only one real kind of fool. And he is the man who is not patient, free from self-conceit, or willing to learn.

The man who will learn and who will be patient is never a fool.

Genius is nothing but patience. AND POWER.

The patience without the mental power cannot produce genius.

But the mental power, no matter how great, cannot translate itself into the work that we call genius unless it has "the infinite capacity for taking pains," which means patience.

Be patient with fools, for they are the majority. And we must make our living from the majority, get our applause from the majority, and win our victories over the majority.

Be patient with fools, also, dearly beloved wise men, because this world would be uncomfortable for you, wise men, if there were not so many fools in it.

There are many successful men, and ninety-nine out of one hundred are really successful BECAUSE NOBODY GAVE THEM SERIOUS COMPETITION.

You can put your finger on the map, and hit any little town, and find in it a prosperous, successful newspaper.

GIVE IT COMPETITION and you won't see it in six months.

And in the same town, on Main street, you will find a very prosperous, successful merchant.

Give him the taste of such competition as a bigger man could give him—and you might soon find him driving the bigger man's delivery wagon, if he hadn't saved up money.

We succeed, because the fools are plentiful, soft and easy, just as the woodman's axe sinks deep, because the trees are plentiful, soft and easy.

Give the axe steel to cut, and the story will be different, and the chopper's arms will ache.

Take away the fools, the men who think they can succeed without effort, and life will become a harder, more difficult problem.

We have in this country a particular form of stupid ignorance which we call race and religious prejudice. It expresses itself often in hatred of Jews.

Did it ever occur to you that small minded, weak failures hate the Jews, BECAUSE THERE ARE SO FEW FOOLS AMONG THE JEWS?

Whether the Jews really were God's chosen people, and manufactured with especial care—we do not know—except through the teachings of faith.

But we do know that the Jews have gone through a severe process of elimination during long centuries.

For two thousand years and more, the cruel, the avaricious and the dishonest have lain in wait for Jews. The so-called "noble men" of the Middle Ages tortured them to get their money.

They were hated because they succeeded.

The Jew who was a fool, in the Middle Ages, did not last long.

And that is also true of the Jew who was a drunkard, or otherwise intemperate.

He could not last in the atmosphere of hatred and murder that surrounded him.

Consequently, the Jews that have survived to our day have had the fools and the drunkards very well weeded out from among them.

Next time you hear some small-minded individual talk contemptu-

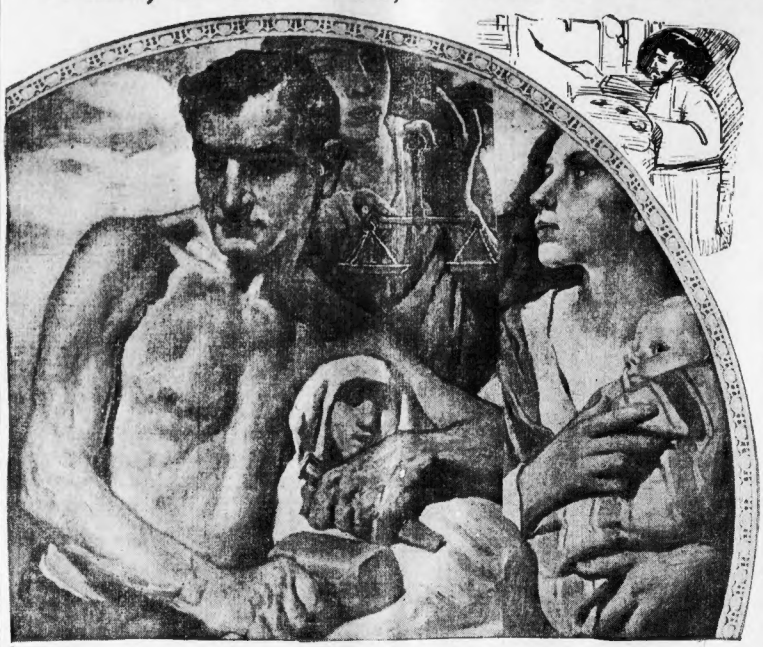
What, in Our Life, Is Worth While?



In this picture you may find practically all that is worth while in life. We offer this to the hundreds of thousands of families in which this newspaper goes as a subject for family discussion, a source of thinking and, perhaps, writing for the young people. (See Editorial.)

(THE ABOVE PICTURE REPRODUCED BY PERMISSION FROM HEARST'S MAGAZINE.)

Work, Affection, Power, Health

Those Are Among the Things That Make Life Noble, Happy and Worth While. Tell the Young Boys and Girls of Your Family to Think and Write About the Picture at the Top of This Page

Copyright, 1913, by Star Company.

Not what others write, but what YOU think is important.

It is the intention of this newspaper to print from time to time pictures with a meaning and ask the readers to study them, discuss them, THINK AND WRITE about them.

Vague thinking does little good. Merely to look and admire is nothing.

Young people should be encouraged and taught to think and write EXACTLY.

Take an hour by yourself, or in the family circle, to discuss this picture and its meaning. Write down what you see in it. Don't try to do "fancy writing," but see how much you can find in this particular picture and how simply and briefly you can express it.

In that magazine there is an article based upon the picture written by a well-known writer—one of the best known in the United States.

Before you read what he thinks, however, find out WHAT YOU THINK.

Hundreds of thousands of different things may be said about this picture by the great family of Boston AMERICAN readers.

It is a picture of that which makes life WORTH WHILE.

Write out now YOUR list of things that are worth while in life.

First comes USEFUL WORK—and that is the biggest thing in this picture.

Without work and useful work life is a failure and a misery.

The highest type of work is that which exercises the brain and the body, calling for imagination, patience and persistence.

Next in importance after work comes AFFECTION—the power that keeps the race moving upward, the power that has changed men from savages to human beings nearly civilized.

The affection of men and women for each other, the deep devotion of a mother for her child—these are the forces that do the work of civilization. And they are in this picture.

What else do you see in the picture?

You see the mysterious head near the hand that holds the chisel. That represents the strange fascination of the unknown. All the strange religions and beliefs for which men have given their lives and taken the lives of others belong to the realm of mystery—an interesting part of life.

What else do you see in the picture?

You see the hand that holds the scales by which we measure values and typify justice.

Justice and property—and the laws—they are important to life. They and many other things are in this picture.

Ask the children, young and old, what this picture means to them. Teach them to think and to express thought. Ask them what seems to them worth while in life and of all the things which one they think most important.

Is it success, happiness, peace of mind, love, glory, property?

An hour spent thinking about this picture and discussing it with the family will do more good than much reading of ordinary news and discussion of ordinary topics.

After you have thought over the picture yourself, you may read in Hearst's Magaine the writings of a well-paid professional writer on the same picture. Compare his ideas and your own.

A GREAT ROMANTIC NOVEL, "The Outpost of Eternity," by Cosmo Hamilton, Begins in Tomorrow's Sunday AMERICAN.

Why in Thy Night?

By MALCOLM DOUGLAS

WHY in thy night
Dost thou repine?
The blessed light
Shall yet be thine.
Then strive, oh, soul,
From depths to rise,
And make thy goal
The far-off skies!

Why shouldst thou be
So trembling, weak?
God meant for thee
His highest peak.
Within thy soul
The power lies,
So make thy goal
The far-off skies!

E'en to that height
Where God shall be;
His stars will light
The way for thee,
Until thy soul
Gains Paradise.
Oh, make thy goal
The far-off skies!

WOULD STOP PROFANITY

Editor BOSTON AMERICAN:

Dear Sir—Might I suggest an editorial on profanity, especially in Boston? Everywhere I go, on trains, trolley cars, on the street, in offices; yes, even in the shadow of the church, I hear the Creator's name vainly taken in front of small children by men and women, some holding high positions. I have heard a lower court judge swear till I shuddered; bankers, business men of all kinds, anywhere and everywhere. I believe an editorial in your paper which reaches so many would help.

Respectfully,
Boston. ARTHUR FARNSWORTH.

OUR NEW HAVEN EDITORIALS

Editor BOSTON AMERICAN:

Dear Sir—Permit me to express my great satisfaction in reading your recent editorials from day to day in regard to the New Haven Railroad. Your arguments are clear and convincing. May I suggest that, inasmuch as the railroad corporations are exercising a public franchise, a certain percentage of the board of directors should be made up of appointees named by a State authority. As it is now, in theory, the majority of the stockholders, interested only in the making of money, have the whole say as to who shall constitute the board of directors.

As a matter of fact, it is a small minority who dictate, and the actual cash interests of the board of directors in the stock of the road are usually insignificant. There is every reason, therefore, why the public should be represented on the board. In many instances, doubtless, such public officers would merely play into the hands of the other directors, but now and then we should have an honest one who could work havoc with the tricks by which such boards frequently divert by devious channels the earnings of the road to their private purposes.

ously of Jews, explain to him the fact that his contempt is really envy, caused partly by the fact that the Jews are not fools and it is disappointingly difficult to get the better of them.

Study the fool, be patient with him. If you know him, you know more than half of the human race.

And study yourself, AND DON'T BE PATIENT WITH YOURSELF, and don't be afraid to call yourself a fool.

Your own criticism should weed out the fool features of your own nature, just as the brutality of the Middle Ages weeded out the fools and the drunkards from among the Jews.

Never call your brother "Raccah," which means "Thou Fool."

If you call your brother "Thou Fool," you will go to hell, as the Bible tells you, and after you get there the things that will happen to you would make a whole moving picture by themselves.

But do not hesitate to call yourself "Thou Fool." There isn't one of us that does not need to be called "fool" BY HIMSELF many times a day.

Be merciless with yourself, merciful to others, PATIENT WITH FOOLS ABOVE ALL.

A Record Without Blemish

Ex-Congressman Michael J. McEttrick of Roxbury is a candidate for re-election to the House of Representatives from his district.

He is a remarkable man. He has been twenty-eight years in public life, voting upon all sorts of public questions, and has not a single blemish on that long and varied record. His more than one-quarter of a century of public service is a wonderful story of fidelity, rectitude and courage. The AMERICAN makes this statement deliberately. We cannot at the moment recall another man with such a public record.

It has been said of Mr. McEttrick that a spectator in the gallery need not trouble himself to study a question in order to learn which is the right side when Mr. McEttrick was to vote, because he had only to observe the side on which Mr. McEttrick voted, for there would surely be the right. It is a privilege and honor and an opportunity to Mr. McEttrick's district when he is a candidate for any office in which the people want a faithful servant.
